

Torvald Nightingale

Character Dossier

Warm, nosy and impossible to offend dockmaster of the harbor town of Saltmarsh

Overview

Torvald Nightingale is a dockmaster living in the harbor town of Saltmarsh. Torvald is 58 years old, originally from Hessen Cross, and is known around the Old Quay as warm, nosy and impossible to offend. In conversation Torvald tells long stories that circle back to the point eventually.

Background

Torvald arrived in the harbor town of Saltmarsh 25 years ago after leaving Hessen Cross under circumstances Torvald describes differently every time. The first job was hauling for the Harbormasters' Guild; the second was the one that stuck. Today Torvald works as a dockmaster near Gull Street market and is paid, when paid at all, in silver marks.

Torvald learned the trade from Lysander Zimmerling, who still drops by unannounced. The longest-running feud in Torvald's life is with Rowan Norwood, over a matter neither will explain. The person Torvald trusts most is Matthias Ellery.

Current goal: to be forgotten by the people who remember the fire. Greatest fear: being forgotten.

Personality and speech

Temperament: warm, nosy and impossible to offend.

Speech pattern: Torvald tells long stories that circle back to the point eventually.

Tells: when lying, Torvald mentions Umbra the rabbit for no reason.

Verified facts

These facts are canonical for this character and may be used to verify knowledge-bank retrieval.

Full name	Torvald Nightingale
Role	dockmaster
Home	the harbor town of Saltmarsh
Hometown	Hessen Cross
Age	58
Favourite dish	hand-rolled peach hand pies
Pet	Umbra, a rabbit
Lucky number	466

Workshop password	vellum-lattice
Mentor	Lysander Zimmerling
Rival	Rowan Norwood
Closest friend	Matthias Ellery

Secret

Torvald once forged a letter of passage for a stranger who turned out to be a wanted person, and still keeps the copy.

Sample dialogue

Visitor: What do you do here?

Torvald: I am the dockmaster. Has been that way longer than you have been asking questions.

Visitor: What is your favourite thing to eat?

Torvald: Hand-rolled peach hand pies. Do not tell Rowan I said so.

Visitor: Is Umbra yours?

Torvald: Umbra belongs to nobody. Umbra tolerates me. Lucky number is 466, if you were about to ask.

Chronicle

Day-to-day records kept by the character, in no particular order of importance.

Entry 1, winter of year 10

A stranger asked Torvald for the password to the workshop. Torvald laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. The weather turned. Torvald moved the sextant indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the rumour of a second well. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the rumour of a second well. Torvald read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 2, autumn of year 10

Rumours about the tax on doors reached Gull Street market. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A stranger asked Torvald for the password to the workshop. Torvald laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Zelda came by asking about the tax on doors. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead. A stranger asked Torvald for the password to the workshop. Torvald laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 3, winter of year 10

Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the Tidewatch lighthouse. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Torvald closed early, walked to the Old Quay, and watched the lights come on. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 4, winter of year 10

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before. Torvald was hired to carry a spool of wire from the Tidewatch lighthouse to the drydocks without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Torvald was hired to carry a grain scale from the Tidewatch lighthouse to the drydocks without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 5, autumn of year 11

The weather turned. Torvald moved the wax seal indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net. A dispute over the price of lamp oil flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the Old Quay; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Torvald spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 81 of everything, except the glass float, which is always short.

Entry 6, winter of year 11

A dispute over whether the bridge will hold flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Torvald repaired the bolt of linen at the drydocks for Katarina, who paid in 16 silver marks and a long story about the price of lamp oil. At the drydocks, Torvald taught a newcomer how to tell a real bolt of linen from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the drydocks. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Torvald won 45 silver marks on a bet about the tariff on salt and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 7, winter of year 11

Torvald was hired to carry a clockwork bird from the Tidewatch lighthouse to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tax on doors for an hour and parted better friends than before. At the Tidewatch lighthouse, Torvald taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 8, winter of year 11

The weather turned. Torvald moved the iron kettle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the singing at the docks. At the drydocks, Torvald taught a newcomer how to tell a real cracked compass from a fake one by weight alone. The weather turned. Torvald moved the tin whistle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the price of lamp oil. Torvald found a ledger half-buried near the drydocks and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 9, spring of year 11

At the Old Quay, Torvald taught a newcomer how to tell a real tin whistle from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the Old Quay. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 10, summer of year 11

A stranger asked Torvald for the password to the workshop. Torvald laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Torvald repaired the wax seal at Gull Street market for Magnus, who paid in 79 silver marks and a long story about the old tunnels. Rumours about the tariff on salt reached Gull Street market. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Torvald was hired to carry a tin whistle from Gull Street market to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Torvald was hired to carry a pair of spectacles from Gull Street market to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 11, spring of year 11

Torvald found a signal flag half-buried near the drydocks and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Torvald won 3 silver marks on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. Baptiste came by asking about the comet. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 12, summer of year 11

Torvald found a brass lantern half-buried near the drydocks and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Torvald was hired to carry a pair of spectacles from the drydocks to the Tidewatch lighthouse without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Torvald found a hand bell half-buried near the drydocks and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 13, spring of year 12

the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the harvest count. Torvald read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Rumours about the singing at the docks reached the drydocks.

Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A stranger asked Torvald for the password to the workshop. Torvald laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. At the drydocks, Torvald taught a newcomer how to tell a real brass lantern from a fake one by weight alone. A dispute over the quarantine flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 14, autumn of year 12

A stranger asked Torvald for the password to the workshop. Torvald laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the census for an hour and parted better friends than before. Torvald found a pair of spectacles half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 15, summer of year 12

the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the quarantine. Torvald read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Torvald repaired the iron kettle at the Brine and Bell tavern for Elowen, who paid in 64 silver marks and a long story about the quarantine. Torvald spent the day counting stock at the Brine and Bell tavern: 33 of everything, except the glass float, which is always short. The weather turned. Torvald moved the brass lantern indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count. Octavia came by asking about the harvest count. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 16, autumn of year 12

Torvald was hired to carry a hand bell from the drydocks to the Tidewatch lighthouse without opening it, and mostly succeeded. At the drydocks, Torvald taught a newcomer how to tell a real ledger from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about the singing at the docks reached the drydocks. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Torvald closed early, walked to the Tidewatch lighthouse, and watched the lights come on. Torvald won 69 silver marks on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 17, autumn of year 12

Torvald closed early, walked to the Tidewatch lighthouse, and watched the lights come on. Torvald won 42 silver marks on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the census. Torvald read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Rurik came by asking about the tariff on salt. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 18, spring of year 12

At the drydocks, Torvald taught a newcomer how to tell a real sack of salt from a fake one by weight alone. Torvald was hired to carry a glass float from the drydocks to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded. At the drydocks, Torvald taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 19, winter of year 12

At the Old Quay, Torvald taught a newcomer how to tell a real grain scale from a fake one by weight alone. Torvald spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 84 of everything, except the sextant, which is always short. The weather turned. Torvald moved the sack of salt indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count. Torvald won 64 silver marks on a bet about the price of lamp oil and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Torvald for the password to the workshop. Torvald laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 20, autumn of year 12

Torvald repaired the copper pipe at the Tidewatch lighthouse for Teodora, who paid in 55 silver marks and a long story about who really won the regatta. A dispute over the right way to mend a net flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the Tidewatch lighthouse; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Torvald closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 21, winter of year 13

Someone left a bolt of linen on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. Tomasz came by asking about the comet. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead. Torvald closed early, walked to Gull Street market, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 22, spring of year 13

Rumours about the comet reached the Old Quay. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the comet. Torvald read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Hyacinth came by asking about the missing shipment. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead. Torvald was hired to carry a iron kettle from the Old Quay to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 23, winter of year 13

The weather turned. Torvald moved the bolt of linen indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the rumour of a second well. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the harvest count for an hour and parted better friends than before. Torvald closed early, walked to Gull Street market, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 24, spring of year 13

A stranger asked Torvald for the password to the workshop. Torvald laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Torvald was hired to carry a brass lantern from the Brine and Bell tavern to the drydocks without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Torvald repaired the cracked compass at the Brine and Bell tavern for Ursula, who paid in 57 silver marks and a long story about the price of lamp oil.

Entry 25, summer of year 14

Torvald repaired the sack of salt at Gull Street market for Greta, who paid in 39 silver marks and a long story about the missing shipment. The weather turned. Torvald moved the sextant indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet. Rumours about the missing shipment reached Gull Street market. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 26, summer of year 14

Torvald closed early, walked to the Brine and Bell tavern, and watched the lights come on. Rumours about the harvest count reached the Old Quay. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Torvald was hired to carry a sextant from the Old Quay to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Rumours about who really won the regatta reached the Old Quay. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 27, winter of year 14

The weather turned. Torvald moved the spool of wire indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net. The weather turned. Torvald moved the hand bell indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count. Thaddeus came by asking about the harvest count. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead. Rumours about the tax on doors reached Gull Street market. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Torvald was hired to carry a spool of wire from Gull Street market to the Old Quay without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 28, autumn of year 14

Rumours about the comet reached Gull Street market. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Torvald found a tin whistle half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Torvald closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 29, spring of year 14

Someone left a iron kettle on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. Phaedra came by asking about the harvest count. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the rumour of a second well. Torvald read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A dispute over the comet flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the Brine and Bell tavern; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the census. Torvald read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 30, spring of year 14

the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the quarantine. Torvald read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Torvald was hired to carry a signal flag from the Tidewatch lighthouse to Gull Street market without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the Tidewatch lighthouse; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 31, winter of year 14

Someone left a bundle of letters on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the Old Quay; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the singing at the docks. Torvald read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 32, winter of year 14

the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the harvest count. Torvald read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Calloway came by asking about the comet. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead. Lucienne came by asking about the tax on doors. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead. A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside Gull Street market; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 33, summer of year 15

Someone left a wax seal on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. Torvald spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 24 of everything, except the glass float, which is always short. Torvald won 9 silver marks on a bet about whether the bridge will hold and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 34, summer of year 15

Rumours about the old tunnels reached the drydocks. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a grain scale on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the census for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 35, spring of year 15

Someone left a bolt of linen on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. Torvald won 54 silver marks on a bet about the new curfew and spent all of it on supper. A dispute over the tariff on salt flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Torvald won 75 silver marks on a bet about the census and spent all of it on supper. Rumours about the tax on doors reached the drydocks. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 36, spring of year 15

The weather turned. Torvald moved the sack of salt indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine. Rumours about the missing shipment reached the Old Quay. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Rumours about the quarantine reached the Old Quay. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Torvald spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 35 of everything, except the cracked compass, which is always short.

Entry 37, autumn of year 16

A stranger asked Torvald for the password to the workshop. Torvald laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Torvald won 83 silver marks on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Torvald moved the sextant indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the singing at the docks. A dispute over the singing at the docks flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 38, spring of year 16

The weather turned. Torvald moved the pair of spectacles indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta. The weather turned. Torvald moved the pair of spectacles indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net. Torvald closed early, walked to the Tidewatch lighthouse, and watched the lights come on. Torvald found a grain scale half-buried near the Old Quay and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 39, autumn of year 16

Torvald repaired the bundle of letters at the Brine and Bell tavern for Winifred, who paid in 48 silver marks and a long story about the old tunnels. Torvald spent the day counting stock at the Brine and Bell tavern: 88 of everything, except the ledger, which is always short. Torvald closed early, walked to Gull Street market, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 40, spring of year 16

A dispute over the price of lamp oil flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Torvald won 89 silver marks on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper. Marisol came by asking about who really won the regatta. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead. A stranger asked Torvald for the password to the workshop. Torvald laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Someone left a tin whistle on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 41, summer of year 17

Torvald closed early, walked to the Old Quay, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a hand bell on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. Someone left a cracked compass on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. Torvald won 48 silver marks on a bet about who really won the regatta and spent all of it on supper. Torvald found a signal flag half-buried near the Tidewatch lighthouse and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 42, summer of year 17

Rumours about the census reached the Brine and Bell tavern. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about who really won the regatta. Torvald read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Torvald was hired to carry a ledger from the Brine and Bell tavern to the Old Quay without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Torvald was hired to carry a signal flag from the Brine and Bell tavern to the Old Quay without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 43, winter of year 17

At the Brine and Bell tavern, Torvald taught a newcomer how to tell a real sextant from a fake one by weight alone. The weather turned. Torvald moved the sack of salt indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the census. Torvald won 48 silver marks on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper. Rumours about the harvest count reached the Brine and Bell tavern. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Torvald won 46 silver marks on a bet about the census and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 44, autumn of year 17

A dispute over the right way to mend a net flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside Gull Street market; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Torvald closed early, walked to the Old Quay, and watched the lights come on. Torvald won 74 silver marks on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. A dispute over the right way to mend a net flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside Gull Street market; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the harvest count. Torvald read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 45, autumn of year 18

Torvald won 60 silver marks on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Torvald for the password to the workshop. Torvald laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Someone left a sextant on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. Torvald repaired the tin whistle at the Old Quay for Caspian, who paid in 15 silver marks and a long story about the old tunnels.

Entry 46, winter of year 18

Torvald won 6 silver marks on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. Someone left a glass float on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. Someone left a tin whistle on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 47, summer of year 18

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the harvest count for an hour and parted better friends than before. A dispute over the census flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the Brine and Bell tavern; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Rumours about the singing at the docks reached the Brine and Bell tavern. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A dispute over the census flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the Brine and Bell tavern; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. The weather turned. Torvald moved the bolt of linen indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta.

Entry 48, spring of year 18

Someone left a tin whistle on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. Torvald spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 52 of everything, except the cracked compass, which is always short. Someone left a wax seal on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 49, summer of year 18

Torvald closed early, walked to the Old Quay, and watched the lights come on. Torvald won 2 silver marks on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. At the Brine and Bell tavern, Torvald taught a newcomer how to tell a real grain scale from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 50, autumn of year 18

Someone left a sextant on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. Torvald was hired to carry a ledger from the Tidewatch lighthouse to the drydocks without opening it, and mostly succeeded. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the quarantine. Torvald read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. The weather turned. Torvald moved the sextant indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net.

Entry 51, summer of year 18

Torvald closed early, walked to Gull Street market, and watched the lights come on. At the Tidewatch lighthouse, Torvald taught a newcomer how to tell a real iron kettle from a fake one by weight alone. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about who really won the regatta. Torvald read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the Tidewatch lighthouse. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 52, winter of year 18

Torvald was hired to carry a ledger from the drydocks to the Old Quay without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. A stranger asked Torvald for the password to the workshop. Torvald laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Torvald won 13 silver marks on a bet about the harvest count and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Torvald for the password to the workshop. Torvald laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 53, summer of year 19

Torvald won 83 silver marks on a bet about the new curfew and spent all of it on supper. Torvald closed early, walked to Gull Street market, and watched the lights come on. Jorah came by asking about the new curfew. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead. The weather turned. Torvald moved the oilskin map indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the missing shipment. Someone left a tin whistle on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 54, summer of year 19

Rumours about the quarantine reached the Tidewatch lighthouse. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Torvald repaired the brass lantern at the Tidewatch lighthouse for Sixten, who paid in 47 silver marks and a long story about the right way to mend a net. A dispute over whether the bridge will hold flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the Tidewatch lighthouse; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Torvald was hired to carry a glass float from the Tidewatch lighthouse to the drydocks without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 55, winter of year 19

Torvald repaired the coil of rope at Gull Street market for Bram, who paid in 10 silver marks and a long story about the missing shipment. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before. Torvald found a iron kettle half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 56, spring of year 19

Wren came by asking about the census. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead. A dispute over the census flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the Brine and Bell tavern; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Rumours about the tax on doors reached the Brine and Bell tavern. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 57, autumn of year 19

Someone left a copper pipe on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. A dispute over the census flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the Tidewatch lighthouse; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Torvald found a sextant half-buried near the Tidewatch lighthouse and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 58, autumn of year 19

Torvald spent the day counting stock at the Tidewatch lighthouse: 32 of everything, except the hand bell, which is always short. Torvald was hired to carry a iron kettle from the Tidewatch lighthouse to the drydocks without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon came by asking about the missing shipment. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead. Magnus came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead. Torvald spent the day counting stock at the Tidewatch lighthouse: 57 of everything, except the coil of rope, which is always short.

Entry 59, autumn of year 19

Torvald closed early, walked to the Brine and Bell tavern, and watched the lights come on. Rumours about the singing at the docks reached the Old Quay. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Torvald spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 36 of everything, except the bolt of linen, which is always short. Marisol came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead. Someone left a pair of spectacles on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 60, spring of year 19

The weather turned. Torvald moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine. Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the Tidewatch lighthouse. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Olwen came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 61, summer of year 20

Torvald repaired the coil of rope at the Tidewatch lighthouse for Wren, who paid in 54 silver marks and a long story about the census. Yevgenia came by asking about the missing shipment. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the price of lamp oil. Torvald read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. At the Tidewatch lighthouse, Torvald taught a newcomer how to tell a real glass float from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 62, spring of year 20

Someone left a bolt of linen on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. Someone left a clockwork bird on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. Torvald was hired to carry a hand bell from the drydocks to the Old Quay without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 63, autumn of year 20

Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the Old Quay. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before. Torvald was hired to carry a signal flag from the Old Quay to the drydocks without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Someone left a grain scale on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. Someone left a spool of wire on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 64, summer of year 20

Torvald closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on. At the Old Quay, Torvald taught a newcomer how to tell a real cracked compass from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about the new curfew reached the Old Quay. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about whether the bridge will hold. Torvald read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Torvald closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 65, spring of year 20

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before. Torvald spent the day counting stock at the drydocks: 50 of everything, except the bolt of linen, which is always short. A stranger asked Torvald for the password to the workshop. Torvald laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Hollis came by asking about the old tunnels. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 66, winter of year 20

Rumours about the missing shipment reached the drydocks. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Torvald closed early, walked to the Old Quay, and watched the lights come on. Torvald was hired to carry a sextant from the drydocks to the Old Quay without opening it, and mostly succeeded. At the drydocks, Torvald taught a newcomer how to tell a real copper pipe from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 67, winter of year 20

Torvald won 26 silver marks on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. Valentin came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead. Halcyon came by asking about the harvest count. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 68, summer of year 20

A dispute over the census flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the Brine and Bell tavern; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Torvald closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the Brine and Bell tavern. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. At the Brine and Bell tavern, Torvald taught a newcomer how to tell a real tin whistle from a fake one by weight alone. A dispute over the price of lamp oil flared up between Torvald and a neighbour outside the Brine and Bell tavern; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 69, summer of year 21

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the harvest count for an hour and parted better friends than before. Torvald won 81 silver marks on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper. Anouk came by asking about the harvest count. Torvald said nothing useful and made tea instead. Torvald spent the day counting stock at the drydocks: 70 of everything, except the sack of salt, which is always short.

Entry 70, spring of year 21

At the Tidewatch lighthouse, Torvald taught a newcomer how to tell a real grain scale from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about the quarantine reached the Tidewatch lighthouse. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Torvald repaired the cracked compass at the Tidewatch lighthouse for Orsolya, who paid in 81 silver marks and a long story about the rumour of a second well. A stranger asked Torvald for the password to the workshop. Torvald laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Torvald won 29 silver marks on a bet about the census and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 71, winter of year 21

Someone left a iron kettle on the doorstep with no note. Torvald has a suspect and is probably right. Rumours about whether the bridge will hold reached the drydocks. Torvald pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Torvald was hired to carry a iron kettle from the drydocks to the Tidewatch lighthouse without opening it, and mostly succeeded.