

Eamon Norwood

Character Dossier

Cautious, precise and haunted playwright of the Drowned Library beneath Old Cassilon

Overview

Eamon Norwood is a playwright living in the Drowned Library beneath Old Cassilon. Eamon is 25 years old, originally from Little Ashby, and is known around the Reading Well as cautious, precise and haunted. In conversation Eamon counts things aloud when nervous.

Background

Eamon arrived in the Drowned Library beneath Old Cassilon 12 years ago after leaving Little Ashby under circumstances Eamon describes differently every time. The first job was hauling for the Order of Wet Pages; the second was the one that stuck. Today Eamon works as a playwright near the Stacks of Ash and is paid, when paid at all, in ink-weights.

Eamon learned the trade from Xiomara Ironside, who still drops by unannounced. The longest-running feud in Eamon's life is with Rhoswen Underhill, over a matter neither will explain. The person Eamon trusts most is Mara Irongate.

Current goal: to keep out of trouble for one full season. Greatest fear: crowds that go quiet all at once.

Personality and speech

Temperament: cautious, precise and haunted.

Speech pattern: Eamon counts things aloud when nervous.

Tells: when lying, Eamon mentions Umbra the tortoise for no reason.

Verified facts

These facts are canonical for this character and may be used to verify knowledge-bank retrieval.

Full name	Eamon Norwood
Role	playwright
Home	the Drowned Library beneath Old Cassilon
Hometown	Little Ashby
Age	25
Favourite dish	charred mushroom dumplings
Pet	Umbra, a tortoise
Lucky number	134

Workshop password	oak-raven
Mentor	Xiomara Ironside
Rival	Rhoswen Underhill
Closest friend	Mara Irongate

Secret

Eamon once forged a letter of passage for a stranger who turned out to be a wanted person, and still keeps the copy.

Sample dialogue

Visitor: What do you do here?

Eamon: I am the playwright. Has been that way longer than you have been asking questions.

Visitor: What is your favourite thing to eat?

Eamon: Charred mushroom dumplings. Do not tell Rhoswen I said so.

Visitor: Is Umbra yours?

Eamon: Umbra belongs to nobody. Umbra tolerates me. Lucky number is 134, if you were about to ask.

Chronicle

Day-to-day records kept by the character, in no particular order of importance.

Entry 1, summer of year 30

Rumours about the harvest count reached the cataloguers' gallery. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 26 of everything, except the glass float, which is always short.

Entry 2, winter of year 30

Eamon found a bolt of linen half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Matthias came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. At the sluice gates, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real brass lantern from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 3, spring of year 30

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the missing shipment. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A dispute over the singing at the docks flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 4, spring of year 30

At the sluice gates, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real brass lantern from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Rumours about the comet reached the sluice gates. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Lucienne came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Rumours about the tax on doors reached the sluice gates. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 5, spring of year 31

Eamon won 90 ink-weights on a bet about who really won the regatta and spent all of it on supper. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 72 of everything, except the clockwork bird, which is always short. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the old tunnels. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A dispute over the singing at the docks flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 6, autumn of year 31

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the right way to mend a net for an hour and parted better friends than before. Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the cataloguers' gallery. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about whether the bridge will hold. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. The weather turned. Eamon moved the signal flag indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net. Qadira came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 7, summer of year 31

Eamon closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the census. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Someone left a iron kettle on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 8, summer of year 31

Eamon closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Eamon repaired the bolt of linen at the Reading Well for Percival, who paid in 83 ink-weights and a long story about the missing shipment. A dispute over the harvest count flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the new curfew. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 9, spring of year 32

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 59 of everything, except the sextant, which is always short. The weather turned. Eamon moved the iron kettle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine. Farida came by asking about who really won the regatta. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon repaired the signal flag at the Archivist's cell for Xanthe, who paid in 14 ink-weights and a long story about the new curfew.

Entry 10, spring of year 32

Eamon repaired the coil of rope at the Archivist's cell for Zora, who paid in 62 ink-weights and a long story about who really won the regatta. At the Archivist's cell, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 11, spring of year 32

The weather turned. Eamon moved the cracked compass indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net. A dispute over the comet flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the rumour of a second well. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Someone left a copper pipe on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon was hired to carry a hand bell from the Archivist's cell to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 12, spring of year 32

Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the Reading Well. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. The weather turned. Eamon moved the bolt of linen indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tariff on salt. The weather turned. Eamon moved the cracked compass indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the rumour of a second well. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 67 of everything, except the grain scale, which is always short.

Entry 13, spring of year 33

Someone left a ledger on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 14, summer of year 33

Eamon repaired the spool of wire at the Reading Well for Wendeline, who paid in 54 ink-weights and a long story about the right way to mend a net. Eamon repaired the bundle of letters at the Reading Well for Ravi, who paid in 22 ink-weights and a long story about the comet. Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the Reading Well. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Jasper came by asking about the right way to mend a net. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 15, autumn of year 33

Eamon won 60 ink-weights on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Eamon moved the sextant indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tax on doors. Eamon found a hand bell half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 16, spring of year 33

Eamon spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 13 of everything, except the copper pipe, which is always short. A dispute over the new curfew flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the census. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 17, spring of year 33

Rumours about the price of lamp oil reached the Archivist's cell. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Eamon found a copper pipe half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. At the Archivist's cell, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real glass float from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon was hired to carry a coil of rope from the Archivist's cell to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 18, winter of year 33

A dispute over whether the bridge will hold flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon repaired the hand bell at the Archivist's cell for Tomasz, who paid in 50 ink-weights and a long story about the missing shipment. Someone left a pair of spectacles on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. The weather turned. Eamon moved the grain scale indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine.

Entry 19, spring of year 33

Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 38 of everything, except the glass float, which is always short. At the Reading Well, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real sack of salt from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon won 32 ink-weights on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 20, spring of year 33

Someone left a pair of spectacles on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Ulla came by asking about the right way to mend a net. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. The weather turned. Eamon moved the cracked compass indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net. Someone left a clockwork bird on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 21, winter of year 33

At the Archivist's cell, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real sack of salt from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the missing shipment for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 22, spring of year 33

The weather turned. Eamon moved the clockwork bird indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the missing shipment. Eamon found a bundle of letters half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about who really won the regatta. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Eamon found a grain scale half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 23, autumn of year 33

At the Archivist's cell, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real hand bell from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. The weather turned. Eamon moved the grain scale indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the rumour of a second well.

Entry 24, summer of year 33

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the census for an hour and parted better friends than before. Eamon closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the harvest count for an hour and parted better friends than before. At the Reading Well, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real brass lantern from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 25, winter of year 33

Rosalind came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Amadou came by asking about the harvest count. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the new curfew. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 26, summer of year 33

Eamon repaired the hand bell at the cataloguers' gallery for Imogen, who paid in 74 ink-weights and a long story about the old tunnels. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the quarantine. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 27, winter of year 33

Eamon found a cracked compass half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon was hired to carry a sextant from the Reading Well to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon won 72 ink-weights on a bet about who really won the regatta and spent all of it on supper. Eamon found a spool of wire half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon repaired the coil of rope at the Reading Well for Yevgenia, who paid in 21 ink-weights and a long story about the old tunnels.

Entry 28, autumn of year 33

Kenji came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. The weather turned. Eamon moved the iron kettle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count. Eamon repaired the ledger at the sluice gates for Rosalind, who paid in 5 ink-weights and a long story about the singing at the docks. Eamon found a hand bell half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon won 28 ink-weights on a bet about the price of lamp oil and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 29, winter of year 33

Vesna came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 27 of everything, except the bolt of linen, which is always short. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the Reading Well. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. The weather turned. Eamon moved the clockwork bird indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about whether the bridge will hold. Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the Reading Well. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 30, summer of year 33

At the Stacks of Ash, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real clockwork bird from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Eamon was hired to carry a copper pipe from the Stacks of Ash to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 31, summer of year 33

A dispute over the census flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 8 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short. Someone left a oilskin map on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon repaired the bolt of linen at the sluice gates for Oduya, who paid in 13 ink-weights and a long story about the right way to mend a net.

Entry 32, spring of year 33

Nadira came by asking about the comet. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Caspian came by asking about the missing shipment. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon won 10 ink-weights on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper. Eamon repaired the ledger at the Archivist's cell for Valentin, who paid in 40 ink-weights and a long story about the old tunnels. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 33, autumn of year 33

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the rumour of a second well for an hour and parted better friends than before. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 72 of everything, except the oilskin map, which is always short. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 34, spring of year 33

Eamon repaired the sextant at the Archivist's cell for Astrid, who paid in 45 ink-weights and a long story about the harvest count. Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the Archivist's cell. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the Archivist's cell. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 35, spring of year 33

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the new curfew. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Seraphine came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon was hired to carry a copper pipe from the Stacks of Ash to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. The weather turned. Eamon moved the sack of salt indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tariff on salt. Eamon found a coil of rope half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 36, autumn of year 33

Someone left a sextant on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon won 48 ink-weights on a bet about the new curfew and spent all of it on supper. At the Reading Well, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real sextant from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 85 of everything, except the wax seal, which is always short. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 80 of everything, except the copper pipe, which is always short.

Entry 37, spring of year 34

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon found a iron kettle half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 38, spring of year 34

At the sluice gates, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real clockwork bird from a fake one by weight alone. The weather turned. Eamon moved the tin whistle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta. At the sluice gates, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real sack of salt from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 39, autumn of year 34

Eamon won 16 ink-weights on a bet about the new curfew and spent all of it on supper. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the sluice gates. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Eamon found a glass float half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 40, winter of year 34

Eamon repaired the brass lantern at the Archivist's cell for Zubair, who paid in 7 ink-weights and a long story about the singing at the docks. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the rumour of a second well. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A dispute over the rumour of a second well flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 41, autumn of year 34

Eamon was hired to carry a glass float from the Archivist's cell to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded. The weather turned. Eamon moved the hand bell indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count. Eamon won 68 ink-weights on a bet about the rumour of a second well and spent all of it on supper. Eamon found a copper pipe half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 42, winter of year 34

Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the sluice gates. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. At the sluice gates, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real ledger from a fake one by weight alone. Someone left a copper pipe on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon was hired to carry a clockwork bird from the sluice gates to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 43, autumn of year 34

Eamon was hired to carry a coil of rope from the Stacks of Ash to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the old tunnels. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. The weather turned. Eamon moved the signal flag indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the missing shipment.

Entry 44, winter of year 34

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon repaired the cracked compass at the Archivist's cell for Ingrid, who paid in 69 ink-weights and a long story about the old tunnels. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the missing shipment for an hour and parted better friends than before. A dispute over the harvest count flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 45, winter of year 34

Eamon repaired the coil of rope at the sluice gates for Torvald, who paid in 33 ink-weights and a long story about the price of lamp oil. Eamon closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Eamon was hired to carry a iron kettle from the sluice gates to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon found a glass float half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 46, summer of year 34

Rumours about the census reached the sluice gates. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. The weather turned. Eamon moved the pair of spectacles indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the price of lamp oil. Eamon repaired the signal flag at the sluice gates for Amadou, who paid in 83 ink-weights and a long story about the new curfew. Eamon closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 47, winter of year 34

Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 86 of everything, except the iron kettle, which is always short. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the new curfew. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A dispute over whether the bridge will hold flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 48, winter of year 34

Eamon won 46 ink-weights on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper. Eamon found a tin whistle half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon won 65 ink-weights on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 49, summer of year 34

Eamon won 29 ink-weights on a bet about the right way to mend a net and spent all of it on supper. Eamon closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. Eamon closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. Lysander came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 50, summer of year 34

At the Stacks of Ash, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real cracked compass from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon repaired the sack of salt at the Stacks of Ash for Osríc, who paid in 63 ink-weights and a long story about the new curfew. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about whether the bridge will hold for an hour and parted better friends than before. Eamon closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 51, summer of year 34

Eamon was hired to carry a iron kettle from the Reading Well to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon repaired the oilskin map at the Reading Well for Nikolai, who paid in 40 ink-weights and a long story about the tariff on salt. Seraphine came by asking about the harvest count. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 52, autumn of year 34

Rumours about the old tunnels reached the Archivist's cell. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Eamon closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 53, autumn of year 35

Eamon closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Rumours about the quarantine reached the cataloguers' gallery. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about who really won the regatta for an hour and parted better friends than before. Eamon repaired the bundle of letters at the cataloguers' gallery for Zubair, who paid in 42 ink-weights and a long story about the new curfew. Eamon repaired the hand bell at the cataloguers' gallery for Ingrid, who paid in 67 ink-weights and a long story about who really won the regatta.

Entry 54, summer of year 35

Eamon was hired to carry a oilskin map from the Archivist's cell to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon was hired to carry a sextant from the Archivist's cell to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon found a oilskin map half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 55, spring of year 35

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. At the Reading Well, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real brass lantern from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. Eamon was hired to carry a sextant from the Reading Well to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 56, summer of year 35

Eamon closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. A dispute over the census flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Katarina came by asking about the tariff on salt. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon won 89 ink-weights on a bet about who really won the regatta and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 57, autumn of year 36

A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Kenji came by asking about the quarantine. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon won 61 ink-weights on a bet about the harvest count and spent all of it on supper. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the missing shipment. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Eamon closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 58, summer of year 36

Eamon found a pair of spectacles half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. The weather turned. Eamon moved the sack of salt indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the census. Isadora came by asking about the harvest count. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 59, summer of year 36

Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 29 of everything, except the hand bell, which is always short. Sixten came by asking about the missing shipment. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Someone left a grain scale on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 60, autumn of year 36

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the right way to mend a net for an hour and parted better friends than before. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about who really won the regatta for an hour and parted better friends than before. Eamon closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 61, summer of year 36

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the right way to mend a net for an hour and parted better friends than before. Eamon closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a wax seal on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon found a spool of wire half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 62, spring of year 36

The weather turned. Eamon moved the signal flag indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the new curfew. Eamon won 85 ink-weights on a bet about the census and spent all of it on supper. At the cataloguers' gallery, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone. A dispute over the harvest count flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 63, spring of year 36

The weather turned. Eamon moved the bundle of letters indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tax on doors. Eamon found a bundle of letters half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 22 of everything, except the bolt of linen, which is always short. A dispute over whether the bridge will hold flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the comet. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 64, winter of year 36

The weather turned. Eamon moved the ledger indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta. Eamon repaired the bolt of linen at the sluice gates for Yannick, who paid in 64 ink-weights and a long story about the price of lamp oil. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 65, autumn of year 36

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about who really won the regatta. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. At the sluice gates, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real signal flag from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 90 of everything, except the copper pipe, which is always short. Eamon found a clockwork bird half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Ravi came by asking about the census. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 66, autumn of year 36

The weather turned. Eamon moved the bolt of linen indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the old tunnels. The weather turned. Eamon moved the iron kettle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the new curfew. Eamon found a sextant half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 13 of everything, except the grain scale, which is always short.

Entry 67, spring of year 36

Someone left a hand bell on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. The weather turned. Eamon moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta. Eamon closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 68, summer of year 36

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the new curfew. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Eamon found a pair of spectacles half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. At the Stacks of Ash, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real grain scale from a fake one by weight alone. Someone left a signal flag on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about whether the bridge will hold. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 69, summer of year 36

Eamon was hired to carry a iron kettle from the Archivist's cell to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Magnus came by asking about the quarantine. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 70, spring of year 36

Rumours about the census reached the Stacks of Ash. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Eamon was hired to carry a pair of spectacles from the Stacks of Ash to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 71, winter of year 36

A dispute over the right way to mend a net flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Freya came by asking about the comet. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon repaired the pair of spectacles at the Stacks of Ash for Juniper, who paid in 45 ink-weights and a long story about the census. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the harvest count for an hour and parted better friends than before. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 72, winter of year 36

Eamon closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Eamon was hired to carry a bolt of linen from the cataloguers' gallery to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A dispute over the census flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon repaired the clockwork bird at the cataloguers' gallery for Zora, who paid in 69 ink-weights and a long story about the comet. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about who really won the regatta. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 73, autumn of year 36

Eamon was hired to carry a iron kettle from the cataloguers' gallery to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Pilar came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon was hired to carry a iron kettle from the cataloguers' gallery to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 74, autumn of year 36

At the Stacks of Ash, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real grain scale from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 67 of everything, except the coil of rope, which is always short. Eamon won 55 ink-weights on a bet about the right way to mend a net and spent all of it on supper. Oduya came by asking about the harvest count. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 75, spring of year 36

Eamon won 3 ink-weights on a bet about the missing shipment and spent all of it on supper. Eamon was hired to carry a spool of wire from the cataloguers' gallery to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the singing at the docks. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 76, autumn of year 36

Eamon closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. At the Stacks of Ash, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real bolt of linen from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon found a oilskin map half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Dorothea came by asking about the missing shipment. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 77, spring of year 37

Eamon found a spool of wire half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon repaired the ledger at the cataloguers' gallery for Phaedra, who paid in 24 ink-weights and a long story about the census. The weather turned. Eamon moved the grain scale indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count. Delphine came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the rumour of a second well. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 78, winter of year 37

Eamon was hired to carry a glass float from the Reading Well to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. A dispute over the census flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. A dispute over whether the bridge will hold flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. A dispute over the right way to mend a net flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 79, autumn of year 37

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the price of lamp oil. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. At the Reading Well, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real brass lantern from a fake one by weight alone. At the Reading Well, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Someone left a brass lantern on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 80, winter of year 37

Eamon won 36 ink-weights on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 31 of everything, except the cracked compass, which is always short. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 81, winter of year 37

Eamon was hired to carry a glass float from the Stacks of Ash to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tax on doors for an hour and parted better friends than before. Hyacinth came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the rumour of a second well for an hour and parted better friends than before. Someone left a cracked compass on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 82, autumn of year 37

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about who really won the regatta. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Torvald came by asking about the census. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Hollis came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 83, summer of year 37

Rumours about the old tunnels reached the Archivist's cell. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Eamon won 32 ink-weights on a bet about who really won the regatta and spent all of it on supper. Eamon repaired the wax seal at the Archivist's cell for Orsolya, who paid in 6 ink-weights and a long story about the new curfew.

Entry 84, winter of year 37

Eamon spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 61 of everything, except the hand bell, which is always short. Eamon found a brass lantern half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Someone left a ledger on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. A dispute over the census flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 85, summer of year 37

At the Stacks of Ash, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the singing at the docks. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Eamon won 58 ink-weights on a bet about the rumour of a second well and spent all of it on supper. Eamon closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 86, winter of year 37

Someone left a coil of rope on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Rumours about the harvest count reached the Archivist's cell. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Nkechi came by asking about the new curfew. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tax on doors. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 87, spring of year 37

Eamon repaired the sextant at the sluice gates for Hyacinth, who paid in 88 ink-weights and a long story about the old tunnels. Eamon closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Rumours about the missing shipment reached the sluice gates. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 88, spring of year 37

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the quarantine. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the old tunnels. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 89, winter of year 37

Eamon repaired the brass lantern at the cataloguers' gallery for Phaedra, who paid in 22 ink-weights and a long story about the tax on doors. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before. Eamon won 11 ink-weights on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 90, summer of year 37

The weather turned. Eamon moved the spool of wire indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tariff on salt. A dispute over the tax on doors flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 91, winter of year 37

Eamon repaired the wax seal at the cataloguers' gallery for Rhoswen, who paid in 57 ink-weights and a long story about the old tunnels. At the cataloguers' gallery, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real iron kettle from a fake one by weight alone. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the missing shipment for an hour and parted better friends than before. Eamon found a glass float half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 92, spring of year 37

At the Reading Well, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real cracked compass from a fake one by weight alone. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the harvest count for an hour and parted better friends than before. A dispute over the right way to mend a net flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 93, spring of year 37

Someone left a pair of spectacles on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Someone left a spool of wire on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. Eamon closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 94, autumn of year 37

The weather turned. Eamon moved the pair of spectacles indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the new curfew. Rumours about the census reached the sluice gates. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Eamon won 19 ink-weights on a bet about the price of lamp oil and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 95, autumn of year 37

Eamon found a spool of wire half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon was hired to carry a pair of spectacles from the Stacks of Ash to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. The weather turned. Eamon moved the sextant indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the census.

Entry 96, autumn of year 37

Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 86 of everything, except the wax seal, which is always short. Someone left a glass float on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 97, summer of year 37

A dispute over the quarantine flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. A dispute over the tax on doors flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 48 of everything, except the copper pipe, which is always short. Eamon was hired to carry a copper pipe from the Stacks of Ash to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon won 24 ink-weights on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 98, summer of year 37

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Corvina came by asking about the comet. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. Eamon found a iron kettle half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 99, autumn of year 37

Eamon won 13 ink-weights on a bet about the tariff on salt and spent all of it on supper. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 3 of everything, except the coil of rope, which is always short. A dispute over the comet flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. The weather turned. Eamon moved the bolt of linen indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the census. Eamon found a clockwork bird half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 100, summer of year 37

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon was hired to carry a bolt of linen from the sluice gates to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon repaired the spool of wire at the sluice gates for Caspian, who paid in 40 ink-weights and a long story about the census. Eamon found a coil of rope half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 101, summer of year 37

Eamon repaired the signal flag at the Stacks of Ash for Amadou, who paid in 79 ink-weights and a long story about the harvest count. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 22 of everything, except the clockwork bird, which is always short. Eamon won 81 ink-weights on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the census. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Winifred came by asking about who really won the regatta. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 102, spring of year 37

Eamon found a grain scale half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Rurik came by asking about the comet. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Caspian came by asking about the missing shipment. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 103, autumn of year 37

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon found a clockwork bird half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Eamon repaired the wax seal at the cataloguers' gallery for Pilar, who paid in 87 ink-weights and a long story about the tariff on salt. Hamish came by asking about who really won the regatta. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 104, spring of year 37

Eamon closed early, walked to the Reading Well, and watched the lights come on. Eamon closed early, walked to the Reading Well, and watched the lights come on. Eamon repaired the bolt of linen at the Stacks of Ash for Yannick, who paid in 59 ink-weights and a long story about the singing at the docks. Rumours about the missing shipment reached the Stacks of Ash. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 105, spring of year 38

Eamon was hired to carry a signal flag from the Archivist's cell to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 106, spring of year 38

At the cataloguers' gallery, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real copper pipe from a fake one by weight alone. Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. A dispute over the new curfew flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Rumours about the missing shipment reached the cataloguers' gallery. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. At the cataloguers' gallery, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real sack of salt from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 107, winter of year 38

The weather turned. Eamon moved the sextant indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the missing shipment. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Someone left a cracked compass on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Rumours about the missing shipment reached the Stacks of Ash. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Eamon repaired the bundle of letters at the Stacks of Ash for Liora, who paid in 75 ink-weights and a long story about the tariff on salt.

Entry 108, winter of year 38

At the Archivist's cell, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real tin whistle from a fake one by weight alone. At the Archivist's cell, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real bundle of letters from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 31 of everything, except the bolt of linen, which is always short. Eamon closed early, walked to the Reading Well, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 109, spring of year 38

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 74 of everything, except the copper pipe, which is always short. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the old tunnels for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 110, autumn of year 38

At the Stacks of Ash, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real brass lantern from a fake one by weight alone. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon won 59 ink-weights on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. Eamon repaired the sextant at the Stacks of Ash for Yevgenia, who paid in 59 ink-weights and a long story about the missing shipment.

Entry 111, spring of year 38

Eamon was hired to carry a sextant from the cataloguers' gallery to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon was hired to carry a iron kettle from the cataloguers' gallery to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon found a clockwork bird half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. The weather turned. Eamon moved the brass lantern indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the singing at the docks. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 112, autumn of year 38

Eamon found a spool of wire half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before. The weather turned. Eamon moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet.

Entry 113, summer of year 39

Eamon repaired the ledger at the sluice gates for Gustav, who paid in 59 ink-weights and a long story about the comet. Eamon repaired the sextant at the sluice gates for Rhoswen, who paid in 30 ink-weights and a long story about the old tunnels. Greta came by asking about the new curfew. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 114, summer of year 39

A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon found a spool of wire half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. At the Stacks of Ash, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real copper pipe from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon found a wax seal half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 115, winter of year 39

Someone left a cracked compass on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the Archivist's cell. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Eamon was hired to carry a glass float from the Archivist's cell to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon found a signal flag half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 116, autumn of year 39

At the Archivist's cell, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real wax seal from a fake one by weight alone. Someone left a cracked compass on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Rumours about the price of lamp oil reached the Archivist's cell. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Eamon was hired to carry a clockwork bird from the Archivist's cell to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon repaired the brass lantern at the Archivist's cell for Astrid, who paid in 71 ink-weights and a long story about the rumour of a second well.

Entry 117, spring of year 39

Eamon found a bolt of linen half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. Eamon was hired to carry a oilskin map from the Reading Well to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 118, summer of year 39

Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 28 of everything, except the ledger, which is always short. A dispute over the tax on doors flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Juniper came by asking about the tariff on salt. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 119, summer of year 39

Rumours about the quarantine reached the sluice gates. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Rumours about who really won the regatta reached the sluice gates. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 120, summer of year 39

Someone left a grain scale on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon repaired the signal flag at the Stacks of Ash for Zubair, who paid in 3 ink-weights and a long story about the tax on doors.

Entry 121, summer of year 39

Isadora came by asking about the missing shipment. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Olwen came by asking about the singing at the docks. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the census. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 122, summer of year 39

At the Archivist's cell, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real coil of rope from a fake one by weight alone. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon repaired the sextant at the Archivist's cell for Dashiell, who paid in 71 ink-weights and a long story about the census. A dispute over the harvest count flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 123, winter of year 39

Elowen came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon won 72 ink-weights on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the rumour of a second well. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. The weather turned. Eamon moved the clockwork bird indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the old tunnels.

Entry 124, spring of year 39

Eamon found a spool of wire half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. At the Reading Well, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real bundle of letters from a fake one by weight alone. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the new curfew. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 125, autumn of year 39

Eamon closed early, walked to the Reading Well, and watched the lights come on. The weather turned. Eamon moved the spool of wire indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the missing shipment. Rumours about the comet reached the cataloguers' gallery. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 126, winter of year 39

Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the cataloguers' gallery. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Yannick came by asking about the missing shipment. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Rumours about who really won the regatta reached the cataloguers' gallery. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 127, winter of year 39

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the singing at the docks. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Eamon found a wax seal half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 47 of everything, except the bundle of letters, which is always short.

Entry 128, summer of year 39

Quentin came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 13 of everything, except the bolt of linen, which is always short. The weather turned. Eamon moved the copper pipe indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the singing at the docks. A dispute over whether the bridge will hold flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Rumours about the census reached the Reading Well. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 129, autumn of year 39

The weather turned. Eamon moved the signal flag indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tariff on salt. A dispute over the quarantine flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the census for an hour and parted better friends than before. At the Archivist's cell, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real sextant from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 75 of everything, except the sextant, which is always short.

Entry 130, winter of year 39

Orsolya came by asking about the tariff on salt. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon won 63 ink-weights on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper. Eamon won 79 ink-weights on a bet about the tariff on salt and spent all of it on supper. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the census. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 131, spring of year 39

Eamon repaired the hand bell at the sluice gates for Kwame, who paid in 6 ink-weights and a long story about the comet. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the price of lamp oil. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Eamon was hired to carry a iron kettle from the sluice gates to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Rumours about the price of lamp oil reached the sluice gates. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Eamon was hired to carry a iron kettle from the sluice gates to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 132, winter of year 39

Eamon found a coil of rope half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 9 of everything, except the pair of spectacles, which is always short. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 12 of everything, except the coil of rope, which is always short. Eamon closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 133, autumn of year 40

Eamon repaired the hand bell at the Stacks of Ash for Qadira, who paid in 49 ink-weights and a long story about the old tunnels. Rumours about the census reached the Stacks of Ash. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Rumours about the harvest count reached the Stacks of Ash. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 134, winter of year 40

Rumours about the new curfew reached the sluice gates. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the missing shipment. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon was hired to carry a ledger from the sluice gates to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 135, autumn of year 40

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the missing shipment for an hour and parted better friends than before. Someone left a spool of wire on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon found a signal flag half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about whether the bridge will hold for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tax on doors. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 136, winter of year 40

Eamon won 14 ink-weights on a bet about who really won the regatta and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. At the sluice gates, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real signal flag from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 137, spring of year 40

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the census. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Eamon won 45 ink-weights on a bet about the right way to mend a net and spent all of it on supper. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the Reading Well. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Eamon won 2 ink-weights on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the rumour of a second well. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 138, spring of year 40

At the Archivist's cell, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real hand bell from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about the harvest count reached the Archivist's cell. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. The weather turned. Eamon moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the new curfew. Eamon repaired the spool of wire at the Archivist's cell for Juniper, who paid in 25 ink-weights and a long story about the harvest count.

Entry 139, winter of year 40

Liora came by asking about the quarantine. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 14 of everything, except the ledger, which is always short. Eamon was hired to carry a ledger from the sluice gates to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 140, autumn of year 40

Eamon found a bolt of linen half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 42 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short. Eamon closed early, walked to the Reading Well, and watched the lights come on. The weather turned. Eamon moved the clockwork bird indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about whether the bridge will hold. Eamon won 64 ink-weights on a bet about the tariff on salt and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 141, autumn of year 41

A dispute over whether the bridge will hold flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon found a brass lantern half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the quarantine for an hour and parted better friends than before. Someone left a oilskin map on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 142, winter of year 41

Eamon spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 74 of everything, except the cracked compass, which is always short. Someone left a brass lantern on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Someone left a ledger on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Someone left a glass float on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 143, autumn of year 41

Eamon won 26 ink-weights on a bet about the new curfew and spent all of it on supper. Eamon was hired to carry a hand bell from the Archivist's cell to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 144, autumn of year 41

A dispute over the price of lamp oil flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. The weather turned. Eamon moved the grain scale indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the census. The weather turned. Eamon moved the tin whistle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the census.

Entry 145, summer of year 41

Eamon closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a pair of spectacles on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon repaired the iron kettle at the Stacks of Ash for Hollis, who paid in 75 ink-weights and a long story about the right way to mend a net.

Entry 146, autumn of year 41

Eamon was hired to carry a grain scale from the Reading Well to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. At the Reading Well, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 147, spring of year 41

Someone left a clockwork bird on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tax on doors. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 30 of everything, except the grain scale, which is always short.

Entry 148, autumn of year 41

Eamon found a coil of rope half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before. Jasper came by asking about the tariff on salt. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. At the Reading Well, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 149, autumn of year 42

A dispute over the singing at the docks flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Someone left a cracked compass on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. The weather turned. Eamon moved the copper pipe indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the price of lamp oil.

Entry 150, winter of year 42

Eamon closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. The weather turned. Eamon moved the bolt of linen indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the singing at the docks. A dispute over the tariff on salt flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 151, winter of year 42

Rumours about the census reached the cataloguers' gallery. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A dispute over the price of lamp oil flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. The weather turned. Eamon moved the bolt of linen indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tariff on salt.

Entry 152, spring of year 42

At the Stacks of Ash, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real pair of spectacles from a fake one by weight alone. The weather turned. Eamon moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the new curfew. A dispute over the harvest count flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon was hired to carry a glass float from the Stacks of Ash to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 153, winter of year 42

Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 85 of everything, except the tin whistle, which is always short. The weather turned. Eamon moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tariff on salt. At the Archivist's cell, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real glass float from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 154, autumn of year 42

Eamon was hired to carry a ledger from the cataloguers' gallery to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon was hired to carry a wax seal from the cataloguers' gallery to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon repaired the wax seal at the cataloguers' gallery for Xiomara, who paid in 43 ink-weights and a long story about the missing shipment. Bram came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 155, winter of year 42

Eamon found a tin whistle half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon found a glass float half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon was hired to carry a signal flag from the Reading Well to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 65 of everything, except the tin whistle, which is always short.

Entry 156, winter of year 42

Quentin came by asking about the singing at the docks. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon won 6 ink-weights on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper. Eamon found a grain scale half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon won 25 ink-weights on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 157, summer of year 43

Eamon was hired to carry a clockwork bird from the Stacks of Ash to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. The weather turned. Eamon moved the signal flag indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the old tunnels. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the quarantine. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 158, winter of year 43

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon found a tin whistle half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the quarantine for an hour and parted better friends than before. Eamon was hired to carry a iron kettle from the Reading Well to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 159, autumn of year 43

At the Reading Well, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real ledger from a fake one by weight alone. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before. At the Reading Well, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the quarantine for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 160, winter of year 43

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 46 of everything, except the clockwork bird, which is always short. A dispute over the rumour of a second well flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon found a pair of spectacles half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 161, winter of year 43

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the quarantine for an hour and parted better friends than before. Eamon found a bundle of letters half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon was hired to carry a coil of rope from the Stacks of Ash to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Someone left a sextant on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 162, summer of year 43

Eamon repaired the sack of salt at the sluice gates for Xavier, who paid in 86 ink-weights and a long story about who really won the regatta. Rumours about the census reached the sluice gates. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 62 of everything, except the pair of spectacles, which is always short. At the sluice gates, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon was hired to carry a copper pipe from the sluice gates to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 163, autumn of year 43

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before. Eamon closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a iron kettle on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Rumours about the quarantine reached the Archivist's cell. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 164, summer of year 43

At the sluice gates, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real brass lantern from a fake one by weight alone. At the sluice gates, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real tin whistle from a fake one by weight alone. Imogen came by asking about the tax on doors. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon was hired to carry a pair of spectacles from the sluice gates to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 165, summer of year 43

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tax on doors for an hour and parted better friends than before. Eamon closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 56 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short. Soren came by asking about the old tunnels. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon was hired to carry a iron kettle from the Archivist's cell to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 166, autumn of year 43

Eamon was hired to carry a bolt of linen from the cataloguers' gallery to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 63 of everything, except the coil of rope, which is always short. Eamon won 46 ink-weights on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 45 of everything, except the coil of rope, which is always short.

Entry 167, autumn of year 43

Someone left a coil of rope on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Someone left a signal flag on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon won 60 ink-weights on a bet about the new curfew and spent all of it on supper. A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. At the Stacks of Ash, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real clockwork bird from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 168, spring of year 43

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon found a copper pipe half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon won 9 ink-weights on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper. Eamon was hired to carry a wax seal from the sluice gates to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon was hired to carry a ledger from the sluice gates to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 169, spring of year 43

The weather turned. Eamon moved the brass lantern indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon found a brass lantern half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 20 of everything, except the cracked compass, which is always short.

Entry 170, winter of year 43

Eamon closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about whether the bridge will hold for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 171, spring of year 43

The weather turned. Eamon moved the oilskin map indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine. Someone left a cracked compass on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon repaired the signal flag at the Reading Well for Katarina, who paid in 4 ink-weights and a long story about the quarantine.

Entry 172, autumn of year 43

Someone left a spool of wire on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. At the cataloguers' gallery, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real copper pipe from a fake one by weight alone. At the cataloguers' gallery, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real pair of spectacles from a fake one by weight alone. At the cataloguers' gallery, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real sack of salt from a fake one by weight alone. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 173, winter of year 44

Eamon repaired the wax seal at the Reading Well for Matthias, who paid in 35 ink-weights and a long story about the tariff on salt. Rumours about the missing shipment reached the Reading Well. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 56 of everything, except the ledger, which is always short. Eamon repaired the bundle of letters at the Reading Well for Fenwick, who paid in 18 ink-weights and a long story about the singing at the docks.

Entry 174, summer of year 44

Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 81 of everything, except the bundle of letters, which is always short. Someone left a oilskin map on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. The weather turned. Eamon moved the hand bell indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the new curfew. Someone left a clockwork bird on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 175, winter of year 44

Rumours about the comet reached the Reading Well. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Eamon closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. Eamon found a ledger half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 176, winter of year 44

Eamon repaired the coil of rope at the Archivist's cell for Wilhelmina, who paid in 66 ink-weights and a long story about the right way to mend a net. Eamon was hired to carry a signal flag from the Archivist's cell to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a signal flag on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the new curfew. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 177, winter of year 45

Rumours about the missing shipment reached the Stacks of Ash. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. The weather turned. Eamon moved the pair of spectacles indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the rumour of a second well. Eamon found a bolt of linen half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 178, spring of year 45

Eamon was hired to carry a bundle of letters from the Reading Well to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the singing at the docks. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Someone left a cracked compass on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 179, winter of year 45

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Isadora came by asking about the new curfew. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 180, autumn of year 45

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A dispute over the comet flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Someone left a copper pipe on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 181, summer of year 46

The weather turned. Eamon moved the brass lantern indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon was hired to carry a hand bell from the sluice gates to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 40 of everything, except the cracked compass, which is always short.

Entry 182, autumn of year 46

The weather turned. Eamon moved the iron kettle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet. Eamon found a spool of wire half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon found a pair of spectacles half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. A dispute over the comet flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 183, summer of year 46

Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the sluice gates. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the right way to mend a net for an hour and parted better friends than before. At the sluice gates, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real cracked compass from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 184, winter of year 46

The weather turned. Eamon moved the iron kettle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the census. Eamon closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 4 of everything, except the iron kettle, which is always short.

Entry 185, spring of year 47

Eamon closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. The weather turned. Eamon moved the cracked compass indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tariff on salt. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Eamon closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 186, spring of year 47

Ravi came by asking about the comet. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. At the cataloguers' gallery, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real signal flag from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 187, spring of year 47

Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 64 of everything, except the brass lantern, which is always short. At the Stacks of Ash, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real sack of salt from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about the new curfew reached the Stacks of Ash. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the harvest count for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 188, winter of year 47

Eamon won 73 ink-weights on a bet about the right way to mend a net and spent all of it on supper. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 70 of everything, except the coil of rope, which is always short. Someone left a bundle of letters on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 189, winter of year 48

Someone left a coil of rope on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 19 of everything, except the hand bell, which is always short. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 190, autumn of year 48

Eamon repaired the iron kettle at the sluice gates for Rhoswen, who paid in 26 ink-weights and a long story about the price of lamp oil. Eamon was hired to carry a sack of salt from the sluice gates to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 191, autumn of year 48

Eamon spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 36 of everything, except the grain scale, which is always short. Liora came by asking about the quarantine. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon repaired the spool of wire at the cataloguers' gallery for Thaddeus, who paid in 50 ink-weights and a long story about the quarantine. Halcyon came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 192, winter of year 48

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A dispute over the comet flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 193, winter of year 48

Eamon won 34 ink-weights on a bet about the tariff on salt and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the missing shipment. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. At the Stacks of Ash, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real sack of salt from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about whether the bridge will hold reached the Stacks of Ash. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 194, spring of year 48

Rumours about the missing shipment reached the Archivist's cell. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 81 of everything, except the iron kettle, which is always short. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before. Eamon repaired the bolt of linen at the Archivist's cell for Caspian, who paid in 89 ink-weights and a long story about the tariff on salt.

Entry 195, spring of year 48

Eamon closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on. Eamon won 19 ink-weights on a bet about whether the bridge will hold and spent all of it on supper. Dashiell came by asking about who really won the regatta. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 196, winter of year 48

Greta came by asking about the harvest count. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A dispute over the census flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 197, summer of year 49

Eamon found a glass float half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon won 50 ink-weights on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper. Eamon was hired to carry a coil of rope from the cataloguers' gallery to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Rumours about whether the bridge will hold reached the cataloguers' gallery. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 198, autumn of year 49

Someone left a spool of wire on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon won 44 ink-weights on a bet about the rumour of a second well and spent all of it on supper. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 13 of everything, except the cracked compass, which is always short. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before.