

Farida Lindqvist

Character Dossier

Theatrical and vain quartermaster of the harbor town of Saltmarsh

Overview

Farida Lindqvist is a quartermaster living in the harbor town of Saltmarsh. Farida is 26 years old, originally from the Lantern Quarter, and is known around the Old Quay as theatrical and vain. In conversation Farida never uses contractions and apologises for it.

Background

Farida arrived in the harbor town of Saltmarsh 6 years ago after leaving the Lantern Quarter under circumstances Farida describes differently every time. The first job was hauling for the Harbormasters' Guild; the second was the one that stuck. Today Farida works as a quartermaster near Gull Street market and is paid, when paid at all, in silver marks.

Farida learned the trade from Yusuf Zimmerling, who still drops by unannounced. The longest-running feud in Farida's life is with Soren Underhill, over a matter neither will explain. The person Farida trusts most is Ysolde Duskmere.

Current goal: to earn the title of master before turning fifty. Greatest fear: the far side of the Old Quay.

Personality and speech

Temperament: theatrical and vain.

Speech pattern: Farida never uses contractions and apologises for it.

Tells: when lying, Farida mentions Sorrow the hound for no reason.

Verified facts

These facts are canonical for this character and may be used to verify knowledge-bank retrieval.

Full name	Farida Lindqvist
Role	quartermaster
Home	the harbor town of Saltmarsh
Hometown	the Lantern Quarter
Age	26
Favourite dish	cold sesame brittle
Pet	Sorrow, a hound
Lucky number	357

Workshop password	lattice-granite
Mentor	Yusuf Zimmerling
Rival	Soren Underhill
Closest friend	Ysolde Duskmere

Secret

Farida sold a family heirloom to pay for Ysolde Duskmere's medicine and told everyone it was stolen.

Sample dialogue

Visitor: What do you do here?

Farida: I am the quartermaster. Has been that way longer than you have been asking questions.

Visitor: What is your favourite thing to eat?

Farida: Cold sesame brittle. Do not tell Soren I said so.

Visitor: Is Sorrow yours?

Farida: Sorrow belongs to nobody. Sorrow tolerates me. Lucky number is 357, if you were about to ask.

Chronicle

Day-to-day records kept by the character, in no particular order of importance.

Entry 1, spring of year 13

The weather turned. Farida moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the rumour of a second well. Farida found a sextant half-buried near the Brine and Bell tavern and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before. Farida won 84 silver marks on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 2, autumn of year 13

the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about who really won the regatta. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Farida repaired the tin whistle at the Old Quay for Dorothea, who paid in 55 silver marks and a long story about the price of lamp oil. Farida repaired the clockwork bird at the Old Quay for Qadira, who paid in 21 silver marks and a long story about the old tunnels.

Entry 3, summer of year 13

Rumours about whether the bridge will hold reached the Tidewatch lighthouse. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the census. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Rumours about the new curfew reached the Tidewatch lighthouse. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Farida spent the day counting stock at the Tidewatch lighthouse: 89 of everything, except the grain scale, which is always short. Farida found a cracked compass half-buried near the Tidewatch lighthouse and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 4, winter of year 13

At the drydocks, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real brass lantern from a fake one by weight alone. Farida repaired the brass lantern at the drydocks for Rhoswen, who paid in 59 silver marks and a long story about the new curfew. Farida won 82 silver marks on a bet about the right way to mend a net and spent all of it on supper. Farida won 78 silver marks on a bet about the rumour of a second well and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 5, spring of year 14

the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the singing at the docks. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. The weather turned. Farida moved the pair of spectacles indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the old tunnels. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 6, autumn of year 14

Farida was hired to carry a sack of salt from the Brine and Bell tavern to the Tidewatch lighthouse without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Brine and Bell tavern; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. A dispute over the price of lamp oil flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Brine and Bell tavern; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Farida repaired the iron kettle at the Brine and Bell tavern for Delphine, who paid in 2 silver marks and a long story about the comet. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 7, winter of year 14

Farida won 25 silver marks on a bet about the rumour of a second well and spent all of it on supper. Farida repaired the iron kettle at the Brine and Bell tavern for Imogen, who paid in 28 silver marks and a long story about the census. At the Brine and Bell tavern, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real hand bell from a fake one by weight alone. At the Brine and Bell tavern, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real iron kettle from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 8, summer of year 14

Farida spent the day counting stock at Gull Street market: 52 of everything, except the oilskin map, which is always short. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Farida closed early, walked to the Tidewatch lighthouse, and watched the lights come on. Rumours about the quarantine reached Gull Street market. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a coil of rope on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 9, winter of year 14

Farida repaired the signal flag at Gull Street market for Nkechi, who paid in 9 silver marks and a long story about whether the bridge will hold. At Gull Street market, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone. A dispute over the tax on doors flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside Gull Street market; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 10, autumn of year 14

Farida won 12 silver marks on a bet about the price of lamp oil and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Farida won 55 silver marks on a bet about the missing shipment and spent all of it on supper. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the singing at the docks. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Someone left a oilskin map on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 11, summer of year 14

A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. At the drydocks, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real bolt of linen from a fake one by weight alone. The weather turned. Farida moved the iron kettle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tax on doors. At the drydocks, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real sack of salt from a fake one by weight alone. Farida won 54 silver marks on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 12, autumn of year 14

Farida closed early, walked to the Tidewatch lighthouse, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a glass float on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. Someone left a brass lantern on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. Farida found a signal flag half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Farida spent the day counting stock at Gull Street market: 13 of everything, except the spool of wire, which is always short.

Entry 13, spring of year 14

Farida repaired the copper pipe at the Tidewatch lighthouse for Katarina, who paid in 79 silver marks and a long story about the harvest count. Farida repaired the clockwork bird at the Tidewatch lighthouse for Winifred, who paid in 85 silver marks and a long story about the quarantine. Farida won 11 silver marks on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper. Farida was hired to carry a brass lantern from the Tidewatch lighthouse to the Old Quay without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A dispute over the right way to mend a net flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Tidewatch lighthouse; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 14, winter of year 14

Farida repaired the wax seal at the Brine and Bell tavern for Percival, who paid in 38 silver marks and a long story about the census. Someone left a brass lantern on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. Someone left a brass lantern on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. Farida found a wax seal half-buried near the Brine and Bell tavern and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Farida closed early, walked to Gull Street market, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 15, autumn of year 14

the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the quarantine. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. Farida repaired the wax seal at the Tidewatch lighthouse for Isadora, who paid in 68 silver marks and a long story about the new curfew. Farida repaired the copper pipe at the Tidewatch lighthouse for Yusuf, who paid in 41 silver marks and a long story about the harvest count. Zeph came by asking about the tariff on salt. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 16, summer of year 14

Farida won 53 silver marks on a bet about whether the bridge will hold and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Farida moved the bolt of linen indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tax on doors. Farida found a coil of rope half-buried near the drydocks and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the right way to mend a net for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 17, autumn of year 15

Farida won 46 silver marks on a bet about the tariff on salt and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Farida moved the pair of spectacles indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the tax on doors. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. At the Old Quay, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real wax seal from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 18, autumn of year 15

Farida found a signal flag half-buried near the drydocks and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Dashiell came by asking about the harvest count. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the right way to mend a net for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 19, autumn of year 15

Farida won 90 silver marks on a bet about the census and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Farida was hired to carry a hand bell from the Brine and Bell tavern to the drydocks without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 20, summer of year 15

Farida was hired to carry a sextant from the drydocks to Gull Street market without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Farida was hired to carry a brass lantern from the drydocks to Gull Street market without opening it, and mostly succeeded. At the drydocks, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real signal flag from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 21, summer of year 15

The weather turned. Farida moved the spool of wire indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tax on doors. The weather turned. Farida moved the grain scale indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the singing at the docks. At the Brine and Bell tavern, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real ledger from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 22, autumn of year 15

Farida repaired the glass float at the Old Quay for Viggo, who paid in 76 silver marks and a long story about who really won the regatta. Farida was hired to carry a brass lantern from the Old Quay to the drydocks without opening it, and mostly succeeded. At the Old Quay, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real tin whistle from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 23, spring of year 15

Farida repaired the iron kettle at the Old Quay for Nikolai, who paid in 84 silver marks and a long story about the singing at the docks. The weather turned. Farida moved the sack of salt indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta. Farida found a clockwork bird half-buried near the Old Quay and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 24, autumn of year 15

Farida was hired to carry a oilskin map from the drydocks to the Old Quay without opening it, and mostly succeeded. At the drydocks, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real hand bell from a fake one by weight alone. Matthias came by asking about the tax on doors. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida closed early, walked to the Old Quay, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 25, winter of year 16

the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about who really won the regatta. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Farida spent the day counting stock at the Tidewatch lighthouse: 52 of everything, except the oilskin map, which is always short. Someone left a bundle of letters on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the Tidewatch lighthouse. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 26, summer of year 16

Farida closed early, walked to the Tidewatch lighthouse, and watched the lights come on. Sable came by asking about the quarantine. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida repaired the glass float at the drydocks for Baptiste, who paid in 38 silver marks and a long story about the old tunnels. Farida closed early, walked to the Tidewatch lighthouse, and watched the lights come on. Rumours about the quarantine reached the drydocks. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 27, summer of year 16

Farida was hired to carry a hand bell from the Tidewatch lighthouse to the Old Quay without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Rumours about the quarantine reached the Tidewatch lighthouse. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 28, winter of year 16

Farida found a bolt of linen half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. At Gull Street market, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real signal flag from a fake one by weight alone. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about whether the bridge will hold for an hour and parted better friends than before. Farida found a brass lantern half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 29, winter of year 17

Farida repaired the bundle of letters at the Old Quay for Jasper, who paid in 79 silver marks and a long story about the quarantine. Farida closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on. Farida spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 7 of everything, except the bolt of linen, which is always short. Farida closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the rumour of a second well for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 30, summer of year 17

Farida was hired to carry a bundle of letters from the Old Quay to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the harvest count. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. At the Old Quay, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real cracked compass from a fake one by weight alone. Imogen came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 31, spring of year 17

Farida found a wax seal half-buried near the Old Quay and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Emeric came by asking about the quarantine. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida won 25 silver marks on a bet about the harvest count and spent all of it on supper. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 32, spring of year 17

the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the old tunnels. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Someone left a hand bell on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. Farida found a coil of rope half-buried near the Old Quay and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Farida closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 33, spring of year 18

Eamon came by asking about the right way to mend a net. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida closed early, walked to Gull Street market, and watched the lights come on. The weather turned. Farida moved the clockwork bird indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet. The weather turned. Farida moved the clockwork bird indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the missing shipment.

Entry 34, autumn of year 18

Hamish came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. At the drydocks, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real copper pipe from a fake one by weight alone. Magnus came by asking about the tax on doors. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 35, autumn of year 18

At the Tidewatch lighthouse, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real copper pipe from a fake one by weight alone. Farida repaired the hand bell at the Tidewatch lighthouse for Soren, who paid in 3 silver marks and a long story about the missing shipment. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 36, winter of year 18

Dashiell came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida repaired the bolt of linen at the Tidewatch lighthouse for Rhoswen, who paid in 77 silver marks and a long story about the tax on doors. Farida found a glass float half-buried near the Tidewatch lighthouse and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 37, spring of year 18

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the census for an hour and parted better friends than before. Farida was hired to carry a brass lantern from the Tidewatch lighthouse to Gull Street market without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A dispute over the tax on doors flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Tidewatch lighthouse; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about who really won the regatta for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 38, winter of year 18

Farida spent the day counting stock at Gull Street market: 64 of everything, except the iron kettle, which is always short. Rumours about the comet reached Gull Street market. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a cracked compass on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 39, winter of year 18

Kwame came by asking about the comet. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida closed early, walked to the Old Quay, and watched the lights come on. At the Tidewatch lighthouse, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real glass float from a fake one by weight alone. Farida found a glass float half-buried near the Tidewatch lighthouse and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. At the Tidewatch lighthouse, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real wax seal from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 40, spring of year 18

Farida closed early, walked to the Brine and Bell tavern, and watched the lights come on. The weather turned. Farida moved the sextant indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tariff on salt. Someone left a brass lantern on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the quarantine for an hour and parted better friends than before. Farida was hired to carry a clockwork bird from the Old Quay to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 41, summer of year 19

Farida won 88 silver marks on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper. Farida repaired the iron kettle at the Brine and Bell tavern for Sunniva, who paid in 86 silver marks and a long story about the rumour of a second well. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the census. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 42, winter of year 19

Someone left a brass lantern on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. At the Brine and Bell tavern, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real glass float from a fake one by weight alone. Rosalind came by asking about who really won the regatta. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 43, winter of year 19

Farida closed early, walked to the Brine and Bell tavern, and watched the lights come on. At Gull Street market, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real coil of rope from a fake one by weight alone. Farida was hired to carry a sextant from Gull Street market to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 44, autumn of year 19

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before. Farida won 12 silver marks on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Farida spent the day counting stock at the Brine and Bell tavern: 48 of everything, except the sack of salt, which is always short.

Entry 45, summer of year 19

Someone left a glass float on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. Farida won 44 silver marks on a bet about the price of lamp oil and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A dispute over the singing at the docks flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Old Quay; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Farida spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 76 of everything, except the pair of spectacles, which is always short.

Entry 46, winter of year 19

Farida repaired the spool of wire at the drydocks for Yevgenia, who paid in 89 silver marks and a long story about the comet. Farida found a grain scale half-buried near the drydocks and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. The weather turned. Farida moved the copper pipe indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net. The weather turned. Farida moved the cracked compass indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet.

Entry 47, autumn of year 19

Farida spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 41 of everything, except the bolt of linen, which is always short. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before. A dispute over whether the bridge will hold flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Old Quay; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 48, autumn of year 19

At the drydocks, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real ledger from a fake one by weight alone. Farida was hired to carry a brass lantern from the drydocks to the Old Quay without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Farida was hired to carry a wax seal from the drydocks to the Old Quay without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 49, summer of year 20

A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Farida closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on. Farida closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on. Rumours about the price of lamp oil reached the Old Quay. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the price of lamp oil. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 50, summer of year 20

The weather turned. Farida moved the oilskin map indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the census. Brigid came by asking about who really won the regatta. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. At the drydocks, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real tin whistle from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 51, spring of year 20

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before. Farida found a wax seal half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the rumour of a second well. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 52, winter of year 20

The weather turned. Farida moved the spool of wire indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tariff on salt. Rumours about the old tunnels reached the drydocks. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a spool of wire on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 53, autumn of year 20

Farida won 45 silver marks on a bet about the right way to mend a net and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Amadou came by asking about the right way to mend a net. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida was hired to carry a coil of rope from the Tidewatch lighthouse to the drydocks without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Farida spent the day counting stock at the Tidewatch lighthouse: 75 of everything, except the iron kettle, which is always short.

Entry 54, winter of year 20

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the missing shipment for an hour and parted better friends than before. Someone left a hand bell on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the rumour of a second well. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. At the Brine and Bell tavern, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real tin whistle from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 55, autumn of year 20

Farida found a copper pipe half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Farida repaired the grain scale at Gull Street market for Orsolya, who paid in 70 silver marks and a long story about the harvest count. At Gull Street market, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real coil of rope from a fake one by weight alone. At Gull Street market, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real ledger from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 56, spring of year 20

Farida found a bundle of letters half-buried near the Tidewatch lighthouse and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Farida found a copper pipe half-buried near the Tidewatch lighthouse and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the census. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. At the Tidewatch lighthouse, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real cracked compass from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 57, spring of year 21

Someone left a tin whistle on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. Farida spent the day counting stock at the drydocks: 70 of everything, except the tin whistle, which is always short. Rumours about the price of lamp oil reached the drydocks. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. The weather turned. Farida moved the bolt of linen indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tax on doors. Farida won 76 silver marks on a bet about the right way to mend a net and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 58, winter of year 21

Farida spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 30 of everything, except the wax seal, which is always short. Farida won 13 silver marks on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper. Farida repaired the glass float at the Old Quay for Rhoswen, who paid in 10 silver marks and a long story about the rumour of a second well. The weather turned. Farida moved the copper pipe indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta. The weather turned. Farida moved the coil of rope indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta.

Entry 59, autumn of year 21

The weather turned. Farida moved the bolt of linen indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the old tunnels. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Teodora came by asking about the census. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida won 90 silver marks on a bet about the harvest count and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 60, winter of year 21

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the harvest count for an hour and parted better friends than before. A dispute over the quarantine flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Old Quay; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. A dispute over the tariff on salt flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Old Quay; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 61, autumn of year 22

Farida won 43 silver marks on a bet about whether the bridge will hold and spent all of it on supper. A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Old Quay; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Farida closed early, walked to the Tidewatch lighthouse, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 62, summer of year 22

A dispute over the rumour of a second well flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Old Quay; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Rumours about the comet reached the Old Quay. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Farida won 60 silver marks on a bet about the harvest count and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 63, winter of year 22

At the Old Quay, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real glass float from a fake one by weight alone. A dispute over the tax on doors flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Old Quay; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Farida won 62 silver marks on a bet about the new curfew and spent all of it on supper. Farida repaired the signal flag at the Old Quay for Xanthe, who paid in 79 silver marks and a long story about the old tunnels.

Entry 64, autumn of year 22

Farida was hired to carry a iron kettle from the Old Quay to Gull Street market without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Farida repaired the ledger at the Old Quay for Petra, who paid in 62 silver marks and a long story about the singing at the docks. Farida spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 11 of everything, except the spool of wire, which is always short. Farida was hired to carry a sextant from the Old Quay to Gull Street market without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A dispute over the harvest count flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Old Quay; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 65, autumn of year 22

Farida found a spool of wire half-buried near the Old Quay and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Farida spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 33 of everything, except the brass lantern, which is always short. Farida closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the old tunnels. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 66, winter of year 22

Farida closed early, walked to the Old Quay, and watched the lights come on. Anouk came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the singing at the docks. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Farida was hired to carry a ledger from the Tidewatch lighthouse to the Old Quay without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 67, spring of year 22

Farida spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 43 of everything, except the copper pipe, which is always short. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about whether the bridge will hold for an hour and parted better friends than before. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 68, summer of year 22

Kenji came by asking about the census. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida found a grain scale half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Farida was hired to carry a signal flag from Gull Street market to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 69, winter of year 23

The weather turned. Farida moved the bolt of linen indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet. Farida spent the day counting stock at the Tidewatch lighthouse: 84 of everything, except the oilskin map, which is always short. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about whether the bridge will hold. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 70, winter of year 23

the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the census. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Someone left a ledger on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 71, winter of year 23

Rumours about the price of lamp oil reached the Brine and Bell tavern. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. The weather turned. Farida moved the brass lantern indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the missing shipment. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the census. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 72, spring of year 23

Farida was hired to carry a tin whistle from the Old Quay to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Zelda came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 18 of everything, except the oilskin map, which is always short. Farida won 54 silver marks on a bet about who really won the regatta and spent all of it on supper. Farida was hired to carry a oilskin map from the Old Quay to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 73, spring of year 24

A dispute over the new curfew flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside Gull Street market; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before. Farida found a iron kettle half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. At Gull Street market, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real pair of spectacles from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 74, winter of year 24

Farida closed early, walked to Gull Street market, and watched the lights come on. Farida repaired the hand bell at the Tidewatch lighthouse for Tomasz, who paid in 57 silver marks and a long story about the tax on doors. At the Tidewatch lighthouse, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone. A dispute over the tariff on salt flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Tidewatch lighthouse; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Farida found a brass lantern half-buried near the Tidewatch lighthouse and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 75, winter of year 24

At the drydocks, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real tin whistle from a fake one by weight alone. At the drydocks, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone. Farida won 36 silver marks on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper. At the drydocks, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone. Farida repaired the bundle of letters at the drydocks for Yevgenia, who paid in 90 silver marks and a long story about the old tunnels.

Entry 76, winter of year 24

Farida repaired the sextant at the drydocks for Ysolde, who paid in 32 silver marks and a long story about the tax on doors. Farida found a brass lantern half-buried near the drydocks and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about whether the bridge will hold. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Farida won 46 silver marks on a bet about the missing shipment and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 77, summer of year 24

Farida found a wax seal half-buried near the Tidewatch lighthouse and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Farida repaired the glass float at the Tidewatch lighthouse for Fitzgerald, who paid in 36 silver marks and a long story about whether the bridge will hold. Farida repaired the glass float at the Tidewatch lighthouse for Magnus, who paid in 77 silver marks and a long story about the tariff on salt.

Entry 78, autumn of year 24

A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Tidewatch lighthouse; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Someone left a grain scale on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. Farida was hired to carry a clockwork bird from the Tidewatch lighthouse to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Farida was hired to carry a bolt of linen from the Tidewatch lighthouse to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 79, winter of year 24

Farida closed early, walked to Gull Street market, and watched the lights come on. The weather turned. Farida moved the pair of spectacles indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the rumour of a second well. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the harvest count. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Farida closed early, walked to Gull Street market, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 80, summer of year 24

The weather turned. Farida moved the iron kettle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet. Farida was hired to carry a ledger from the Brine and Bell tavern to Gull Street market without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Farida was hired to carry a wax seal from the Brine and Bell tavern to Gull Street market without opening it, and mostly succeeded. The weather turned. Farida moved the coil of rope indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta. Rumours about the missing shipment reached the Brine and Bell tavern. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 81, spring of year 25

A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Farida found a bundle of letters half-buried near the Old Quay and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before. A dispute over the tariff on salt flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Old Quay; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 82, winter of year 25

Farida found a wax seal half-buried near the Brine and Bell tavern and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Farida won 33 silver marks on a bet about who really won the regatta and spent all of it on supper. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the old tunnels for an hour and parted better friends than before. Someone left a clockwork bird on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 83, summer of year 25

Rumours about the comet reached the drydocks. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Farida won 63 silver marks on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Phaedra came by asking about the comet. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 84, winter of year 25

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tax on doors for an hour and parted better friends than before. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Farida closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on. Farida closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 85, spring of year 25

Farida found a sextant half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Farida won 64 silver marks on a bet about the missing shipment and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Farida moved the bolt of linen indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the missing shipment.

Entry 86, summer of year 25

Farida won 88 silver marks on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. Farida found a copper pipe half-buried near the drydocks and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 87, autumn of year 25

The weather turned. Farida moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine. Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about who really won the regatta. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 88, summer of year 25

Farida spent the day counting stock at the drydocks: 36 of everything, except the bolt of linen, which is always short. Farida repaired the bolt of linen at the drydocks for Corvina, who paid in 50 silver marks and a long story about the rumour of a second well. Farida closed early, walked to the Old Quay, and watched the lights come on. Farida won 44 silver marks on a bet about the new curfew and spent all of it on supper. Rumours about the old tunnels reached the drydocks. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 89, spring of year 25

Rowan came by asking about the right way to mend a net. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Old Quay; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Farida found a bolt of linen half-buried near the Old Quay and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 90, spring of year 25

Farida spent the day counting stock at the drydocks: 8 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short. Farida won 15 silver marks on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper. Zora came by asking about the new curfew. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida closed early, walked to the Tidewatch lighthouse, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 91, winter of year 25

A dispute over the singing at the docks flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside Gull Street market; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. At Gull Street market, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real grain scale from a fake one by weight alone. Farida won 25 silver marks on a bet about the missing shipment and spent all of it on supper. Someone left a oilskin map on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 92, summer of year 25

the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the census. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Someone left a wax seal on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. Someone left a clockwork bird on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 93, spring of year 25

Magnus came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Someone left a hand bell on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. Farida found a cracked compass half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Farida was hired to carry a spool of wire from Gull Street market to the Tidewatch lighthouse without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 94, autumn of year 25

The weather turned. Farida moved the oilskin map indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the rumour of a second well. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. The weather turned. Farida moved the ledger indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the census. Farida closed early, walked to the Tidewatch lighthouse, and watched the lights come on. Farida spent the day counting stock at Gull Street market: 14 of everything, except the clockwork bird, which is always short.

Entry 95, summer of year 25

Farida won 32 silver marks on a bet about whether the bridge will hold and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Farida moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net. Xavier came by asking about the singing at the docks. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Someone left a tin whistle on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 96, summer of year 25

At Gull Street market, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real sack of salt from a fake one by weight alone. Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. The weather turned. Farida moved the signal flag indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tariff on salt. Farida spent the day counting stock at Gull Street market: 64 of everything, except the wax seal, which is always short. Rumours about the price of lamp oil reached Gull Street market. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 97, winter of year 25

the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the comet. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. The weather turned. Farida moved the tin whistle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Calloway came by asking about the census. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. A dispute over the harvest count flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 98, autumn of year 25

Farida was hired to carry a cracked compass from the Tidewatch lighthouse to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Farida closed early, walked to the Brine and Bell tavern, and watched the lights come on. Farida closed early, walked to the Brine and Bell tavern, and watched the lights come on. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the missing shipment. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 99, autumn of year 25

the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the rumour of a second well. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before. Farida spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 6 of everything, except the wax seal, which is always short.

Entry 100, winter of year 25

Farida was hired to carry a wax seal from the drydocks to Gull Street market without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A dispute over whether the bridge will hold flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. At the drydocks, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real sextant from a fake one by weight alone. Farida repaired the clockwork bird at the drydocks for Anouk, who paid in 29 silver marks and a long story about the missing shipment.

Entry 101, autumn of year 25

Farida closed early, walked to the Old Quay, and watched the lights come on. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the old tunnels for an hour and parted better friends than before. Octavia came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida found a tin whistle half-buried near the Brine and Bell tavern and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Someone left a sextant on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 102, winter of year 25

Farida won 69 silver marks on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper. Farida found a hand bell half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. The weather turned. Farida moved the copper pipe indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tariff on salt. Rumours about the price of lamp oil reached Gull Street market. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. The weather turned. Farida moved the cracked compass indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count.

Entry 103, autumn of year 25

Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the Brine and Bell tavern. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Farida was hired to carry a spool of wire from the Brine and Bell tavern to the Tidewatch lighthouse without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Farida closed early, walked to the Tidewatch lighthouse, and watched the lights come on. Farida spent the day counting stock at the Brine and Bell tavern: 52 of everything, except the clockwork bird, which is always short.

Entry 104, spring of year 25

Farida was hired to carry a spool of wire from the drydocks to the Tidewatch lighthouse without opening it, and mostly succeeded. At the drydocks, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real grain scale from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the drydocks. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A dispute over the new curfew flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Farida found a glass float half-buried near the drydocks and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 105, winter of year 26

A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Someone left a copper pipe on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. The weather turned. Farida moved the brass lantern indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine.

Entry 106, autumn of year 26

the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the census. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. At the Old Quay, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone. Farida was hired to carry a ledger from the Old Quay to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 107, winter of year 26

A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Brine and Bell tavern; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Farida spent the day counting stock at the Brine and Bell tavern: 45 of everything, except the iron kettle, which is always short. At the Brine and Bell tavern, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real hand bell from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 108, summer of year 26

Farida won 78 silver marks on a bet about the new curfew and spent all of it on supper. Yevgenia came by asking about the missing shipment. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida found a clockwork bird half-buried near the Brine and Bell tavern and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Juniper came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 109, autumn of year 27

Farida spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 76 of everything, except the spool of wire, which is always short. Farida won 7 silver marks on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. Farida spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 60 of everything, except the spool of wire, which is always short. Someone left a iron kettle on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. Farida found a bundle of letters half-buried near the Old Quay and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 110, spring of year 27

Liora came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida repaired the bundle of letters at the Brine and Bell tavern for Benedikt, who paid in 76 silver marks and a long story about the census. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the old tunnels for an hour and parted better friends than before. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the right way to mend a net for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 111, autumn of year 27

Fitzgerald came by asking about the harvest count. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida found a hand bell half-buried near the drydocks and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the new curfew. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 112, summer of year 27

Someone left a glass float on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. A dispute over the price of lamp oil flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside Gull Street market; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Farida repaired the cracked compass at Gull Street market for Matthias, who paid in 28 silver marks and a long story about whether the bridge will hold. At Gull Street market, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real sextant from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 113, autumn of year 27

Xanthe came by asking about the new curfew. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida was hired to carry a wax seal from the Brine and Bell tavern to Gull Street market without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Farida won 84 silver marks on a bet about the missing shipment and spent all of it on supper. Farida repaired the sextant at the Brine and Bell tavern for Greta, who paid in 69 silver marks and a long story about the quarantine. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 114, winter of year 27

Farida spent the day counting stock at Gull Street market: 58 of everything, except the iron kettle, which is always short. Farida spent the day counting stock at Gull Street market: 44 of everything, except the grain scale, which is always short. Farida won 85 silver marks on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. Olwen came by asking about the tariff on salt. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the singing at the docks. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 115, summer of year 27

At the Old Quay, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real bundle of letters from a fake one by weight alone. Someone left a grain scale on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the Old Quay. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 116, summer of year 27

Someone left a bolt of linen on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. The weather turned. Farida moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine. At the Brine and Bell tavern, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real grain scale from a fake one by weight alone. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the new curfew. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 117, winter of year 27

Farida was hired to carry a glass float from Gull Street market to the drydocks without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Farida was hired to carry a cracked compass from Gull Street market to the drydocks without opening it, and mostly succeeded. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about whether the bridge will hold for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 118, winter of year 27

Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the drydocks. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the comet. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Farida repaired the hand bell at the drydocks for Astrid, who paid in 47 silver marks and a long story about the census. Astrid came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 119, summer of year 27

A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside Gull Street market; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. At Gull Street market, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real clockwork bird from a fake one by weight alone. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about whether the bridge will hold for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 120, summer of year 27

Farida found a glass float half-buried near the Tidewatch lighthouse and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Farida closed early, walked to the Brine and Bell tavern, and watched the lights come on. Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the Tidewatch lighthouse. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 121, winter of year 27

Halcyon came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Rumours about the singing at the docks reached the Old Quay. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Amadou came by asking about the quarantine. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Lysander came by asking about the comet. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 122, autumn of year 27

Farida repaired the sack of salt at the drydocks for Olwen, who paid in 29 silver marks and a long story about the tax on doors. Farida was hired to carry a tin whistle from the drydocks to the Tidewatch lighthouse without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 123, autumn of year 27

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before. Farida repaired the glass float at the Brine and Bell tavern for Oduya, who paid in 84 silver marks and a long story about the tariff on salt. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 124, spring of year 27

Ingrid came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida closed early, walked to the Tidewatch lighthouse, and watched the lights come on. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Farida was hired to carry a wax seal from the Old Quay to the Tidewatch lighthouse without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Farida found a grain scale half-buried near the Old Quay and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 125, winter of year 27

Farida spent the day counting stock at the drydocks: 75 of everything, except the tin whistle, which is always short. At the drydocks, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real grain scale from a fake one by weight alone. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 126, winter of year 27

Farida spent the day counting stock at the drydocks: 39 of everything, except the grain scale, which is always short. Farida closed early, walked to the Brine and Bell tavern, and watched the lights come on. At the drydocks, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real tin whistle from a fake one by weight alone. The weather turned. Farida moved the cracked compass indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the price of lamp oil. Farida was hired to carry a ledger from the drydocks to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 127, winter of year 27

The weather turned. Farida moved the grain scale indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the census. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the new curfew. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Rumours about who really won the regatta reached Gull Street market. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached Gull Street market. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Farida found a bolt of linen half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 128, autumn of year 27

Farida spent the day counting stock at the Tidewatch lighthouse: 89 of everything, except the coil of rope, which is always short. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about whether the bridge will hold for an hour and parted better friends than before. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 129, autumn of year 27

Farida repaired the grain scale at Gull Street market for Umberto, who paid in 49 silver marks and a long story about the new curfew. Farida found a ledger half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Farida won 72 silver marks on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper. Farida found a ledger half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 130, spring of year 27

A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Farida repaired the iron kettle at the Old Quay for Baptiste, who paid in 70 silver marks and a long story about the new curfew. The weather turned. Farida moved the clockwork bird indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the singing at the docks. Farida won 53 silver marks on a bet about the census and spent all of it on supper. Farida found a iron kettle half-buried near the Old Quay and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 131, winter of year 27

A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before. Farida closed early, walked to the Tidewatch lighthouse, and watched the lights come on. Farida was hired to carry a grain scale from the Old Quay to the Tidewatch lighthouse without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 132, winter of year 27

Farida closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a bundle of letters on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. Someone left a tin whistle on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. At the Brine and Bell tavern, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 133, spring of year 28

Farida closed early, walked to the Old Quay, and watched the lights come on. Zelda came by asking about the tariff on salt. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. The weather turned. Farida moved the coil of rope indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet. A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Brine and Bell tavern; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. At the Brine and Bell tavern, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real pair of spectacles from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 134, winter of year 28

Farida closed early, walked to the Tidewatch lighthouse, and watched the lights come on. A dispute over the census flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Old Quay; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. The weather turned. Farida moved the hand bell indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the price of lamp oil. A dispute over the quarantine flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Old Quay; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Farida was hired to carry a glass float from the Old Quay to the Tidewatch lighthouse without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 135, summer of year 28

A dispute over the comet flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Brine and Bell tavern; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. At the Brine and Bell tavern, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real coil of rope from a fake one by weight alone. A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Brine and Bell tavern; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Farida found a pair of spectacles half-buried near the Brine and Bell tavern and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Rumours about the tax on doors reached the Brine and Bell tavern. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 136, summer of year 28

Farida closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on. Farida repaired the bundle of letters at the Tidewatch lighthouse for Benedikt, who paid in 19 silver marks and a long story about the rumour of a second well. Farida found a brass lantern half-buried near the Tidewatch lighthouse and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. A dispute over the census flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the Tidewatch lighthouse; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 137, spring of year 28

the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the harvest count. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. The weather turned. Farida moved the sextant indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 138, winter of year 28

Farida repaired the bundle of letters at Gull Street market for Caspian, who paid in 84 silver marks and a long story about the new curfew. Fenwick came by asking about the tax on doors. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida won 15 silver marks on a bet about the rumour of a second well and spent all of it on supper. A dispute over the rumour of a second well flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside Gull Street market; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Someone left a clockwork bird on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 139, autumn of year 28

Gideon came by asking about the singing at the docks. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the missing shipment. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Wendeline came by asking about the old tunnels. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida was hired to carry a wax seal from the Old Quay to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 140, winter of year 28

Farida spent the day counting stock at the drydocks: 52 of everything, except the hand bell, which is always short. The weather turned. Farida moved the brass lantern indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tax on doors. Someone left a copper pipe on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 141, spring of year 28

A dispute over the right way to mend a net flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Farida found a cracked compass half-buried near the drydocks and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the rumour of a second well for an hour and parted better friends than before. Farida won 32 silver marks on a bet about who really won the regatta and spent all of it on supper. Farida found a sack of salt half-buried near the drydocks and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 142, summer of year 28

Soren came by asking about the quarantine. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Olwen came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the new curfew. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 143, spring of year 28

Farida found a sextant half-buried near the Old Quay and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Farida closed early, walked to the Brine and Bell tavern, and watched the lights come on. The weather turned. Farida moved the signal flag indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine.

Entry 144, spring of year 28

Someone left a pair of spectacles on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Farida found a bundle of letters half-buried near the drydocks and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Farida was hired to carry a bundle of letters from the drydocks to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded. The weather turned. Farida moved the coil of rope indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta.

Entry 145, summer of year 28

Farida closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on. Farida won 84 silver marks on a bet about the tariff on salt and spent all of it on supper. Farida won 53 silver marks on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about whether the bridge will hold for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 146, spring of year 28

Farida found a cracked compass half-buried near the Tidewatch lighthouse and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Farida won 38 silver marks on a bet about the missing shipment and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Farida moved the grain scale indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the singing at the docks. The weather turned. Farida moved the grain scale indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the old tunnels.

Entry 147, autumn of year 28

Farida was hired to carry a pair of spectacles from Gull Street market to the drydocks without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Farida spent the day counting stock at Gull Street market: 32 of everything, except the spool of wire, which is always short. Farida repaired the signal flag at Gull Street market for Eamon, who paid in 80 silver marks and a long story about the census.

Entry 148, autumn of year 28

Farida repaired the pair of spectacles at the Brine and Bell tavern for Hyacinth, who paid in 5 silver marks and a long story about who really won the regatta. Farida repaired the iron kettle at the Brine and Bell tavern for Rosalind, who paid in 6 silver marks and a long story about the tariff on salt. Farida won 78 silver marks on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the harvest count. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 149, summer of year 28

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the old tunnels for an hour and parted better friends than before. At the Brine and Bell tavern, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone. Farida repaired the tin whistle at the Brine and Bell tavern for Isadora, who paid in 76 silver marks and a long story about the tariff on salt. Hollis came by asking about the tax on doors. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 150, winter of year 28

Farida was hired to carry a grain scale from the Tidewatch lighthouse to Gull Street market without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Farida found a iron kettle half-buried near the Tidewatch lighthouse and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 151, spring of year 28

Farida repaired the glass float at the Brine and Bell tavern for Dashiell, who paid in 33 silver marks and a long story about who really won the regatta. Farida found a cracked compass half-buried near the Brine and Bell tavern and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Farida found a pair of spectacles half-buried near the Brine and Bell tavern and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 152, winter of year 28

At the drydocks, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real wax seal from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the drydocks. Farida pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a pair of spectacles on the doorstep with no note. Farida has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 153, summer of year 29

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the right way to mend a net for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the rumour of a second well. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Farida repaired the coil of rope at the drydocks for Hollis, who paid in 87 silver marks and a long story about the comet.

Entry 154, summer of year 29

A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A dispute over whether the bridge will hold flared up between Farida and a neighbour outside Gull Street market; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before. Farida won 54 silver marks on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Farida for the password to the workshop. Farida laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 155, autumn of year 29

Farida found a clockwork bird half-buried near the drydocks and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the census. Farida read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Zeph came by asking about the missing shipment. Farida said nothing useful and made tea instead. Farida found a tin whistle half-buried near the drydocks and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 156, summer of year 29

At the drydocks, Farida taught a newcomer how to tell a real cracked compass from a fake one by weight alone. Farida won 30 silver marks on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Farida moved the iron kettle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet.