

Kwame Nightingale

Character Dossier

Playful, with a cruel streak they regret quartermaster of the harbor town of Saltmarsh

Overview

Kwame Nightingale is a quartermaster living in the harbor town of Saltmarsh. Kwame is 42 years old, originally from New Aster, and is known around the Old Quay as playful, with a cruel streak they regret. In conversation Kwame gives directions by landmark, never by street name.

Background

Kwame arrived in the harbor town of Saltmarsh 18 years ago after leaving New Aster under circumstances Kwame describes differently every time. The first job was hauling for the Harbormasters' Guild; the second was the one that stuck. Today Kwame works as a quartermaster near Gull Street market and is paid, when paid at all, in silver marks.

Kwame learned the trade from Delphine Merriwether, who still drops by unannounced. The longest-running feud in Kwame's life is with Xavier Grimsby, over a matter neither will explain. The person Kwame trusts most is Liora Nightingale.

Current goal: to earn the title of master before turning fifty. Greatest fear: letting people down.

Personality and speech

Temperament: playful, with a cruel streak they regret.

Speech pattern: Kwame gives directions by landmark, never by street name.

Tells: when lying, Kwame mentions Halo the owl for no reason.

Verified facts

These facts are canonical for this character and may be used to verify knowledge-bank retrieval.

Full name	Kwame Nightingale
Role	quartermaster
Home	the harbor town of Saltmarsh
Hometown	New Aster
Age	42
Favourite dish	festival coconut porridge
Pet	Halo, a owl
Lucky number	371

Workshop password	cedar-fable
Mentor	Delphine Merriwether
Rival	Xavier Grimsby
Closest friend	Liora Nightingale

Secret

Kwame has never told Delphine Merriwether that the famous 'accident' was deliberate.

Sample dialogue

Visitor: What do you do here?

Kwame: I am the quartermaster. Has been that way longer than you have been asking questions.

Visitor: What is your favourite thing to eat?

Kwame: Festival coconut porridge. Do not tell Xavier I said so.

Visitor: Is Halo yours?

Kwame: Halo belongs to nobody. Halo tolerates me. Lucky number is 371, if you were about to ask.

Chronicle

Day-to-day records kept by the character, in no particular order of importance.

Entry 1, winter of year 22

The weather turned. Kwame moved the pair of spectacles indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the price of lamp oil. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the singing at the docks. Kwame read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. The weather turned. Kwame moved the grain scale indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net.

Entry 2, autumn of year 22

Kwame found a copper pipe half-buried near the Old Quay and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Rumours about the missing shipment reached the Old Quay. Kwame pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Kwame was hired to carry a spool of wire from the Old Quay to Gull Street market without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 3, summer of year 22

Kwame found a sack of salt half-buried near the Old Quay and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Rumours about the tax on doors reached the Old Quay. Kwame pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. The weather turned. Kwame moved the sextant indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the singing at the docks.

Entry 4, spring of year 22

A dispute over the census flared up between Kwame and a neighbour outside the Old Quay; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. At the Old Quay, Kwame taught a newcomer how to tell a real bolt of linen from a fake one by weight alone. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the comet. Kwame read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 5, spring of year 23

Kwame was hired to carry a hand bell from the Tidewatch lighthouse to Gull Street market without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Rumours about the tax on doors reached the Tidewatch lighthouse. Kwame pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the census. Kwame read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Kwame was hired to carry a glass float from the Tidewatch lighthouse to Gull Street market without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 6, spring of year 23

Rumours about who really won the regatta reached the Brine and Bell tavern. Kwame pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a grain scale on the doorstep with no note. Kwame has a suspect and is probably right. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the census. Kwame read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Kwame closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on. Kwame repaired the sextant at the Brine and Bell tavern for Dorothea, who paid in 33 silver marks and a long story about the tariff on salt.

Entry 7, spring of year 23

At the drydocks, Kwame taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone. Kwame was hired to carry a cracked compass from the drydocks to the Tidewatch lighthouse without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Kwame closed early, walked to the Tidewatch lighthouse, and watched the lights come on. The weather turned. Kwame moved the oilskin map indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the new curfew. A dispute over the harvest count flared up between Kwame and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 8, summer of year 23

Kwame won 32 silver marks on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. Tiberius came by asking about the singing at the docks. Kwame said nothing useful and made tea instead. Hollis came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Kwame said nothing useful and made tea instead. Oduya came by asking about the census. Kwame said nothing useful and made tea instead. Kwame found a clockwork bird half-buried near the Tidewatch lighthouse and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 9, autumn of year 23

A stranger asked Kwame for the password to the workshop. Kwame laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. At the Old Quay, Kwame taught a newcomer how to tell a real grain scale from a fake one by weight alone. Kwame was hired to carry a coil of rope from the Old Quay to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before. Wendeline came by asking about the tariff on salt. Kwame said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 10, summer of year 23

At the drydocks, Kwame taught a newcomer how to tell a real sack of salt from a fake one by weight alone. At the drydocks, Kwame taught a newcomer how to tell a real iron kettle from a fake one by weight alone. Kwame won 56 silver marks on a bet about the price of lamp oil and spent all of it on supper. Kwame spent the day counting stock at the drydocks: 52 of everything, except the copper pipe, which is always short. Kwame closed early, walked to Gull Street market, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 11, spring of year 23

Kwame found a bolt of linen half-buried near the Brine and Bell tavern and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Sunniva came by asking about the old tunnels. Kwame said nothing useful and made tea instead. The weather turned. Kwame moved the sack of salt indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tariff on salt. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 12, spring of year 23

At the drydocks, Kwame taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone. Kwame won 20 silver marks on a bet about the tariff on salt and spent all of it on supper. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the census. Kwame read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 13, autumn of year 23

Kwame found a cracked compass half-buried near the Tidewatch lighthouse and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 14, summer of year 23

Kwame was hired to carry a wax seal from Gull Street market to the Old Quay without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Kwame closed early, walked to the Old Quay, and watched the lights come on. Kwame was hired to carry a clockwork bird from Gull Street market to the Old Quay without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Kwame repaired the hand bell at Gull Street market for Corvina, who paid in 29 silver marks and a long story about the census. Someone left a hand bell on the doorstep with no note. Kwame has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 15, autumn of year 23

Kwame found a pair of spectacles half-buried near the Old Quay and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. At the Old Quay, Kwame taught a newcomer how to tell a real hand bell from a fake one by weight alone. Kwame found a wax seal half-buried near the Old Quay and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Someone left a pair of spectacles on the doorstep with no note. Kwame has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 16, autumn of year 23

At Gull Street market, Kwame taught a newcomer how to tell a real iron kettle from a fake one by weight alone. Kwame spent the day counting stock at Gull Street market: 73 of everything, except the sack of salt, which is always short. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about who really won the regatta for an hour and parted better friends than before. Kwame found a spool of wire half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 17, summer of year 23

Kwame spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 65 of everything, except the coil of rope, which is always short. A dispute over the tariff on salt flared up between Kwame and a neighbour outside the Old Quay; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Someone left a copper pipe on the doorstep with no note. Kwame has a suspect and is probably right. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the missing shipment for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the quarantine. Kwame read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 18, summer of year 23

the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the census. Kwame read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A dispute over the price of lamp oil flared up between Kwame and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Yannick came by asking about the new curfew. Kwame said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 19, winter of year 23

Kwame was hired to carry a cracked compass from the drydocks to Gull Street market without opening it, and mostly succeeded. At the drydocks, Kwame taught a newcomer how to tell a real bundle of letters from a fake one by weight alone. Kwame was hired to carry a pair of spectacles from the drydocks to Gull Street market without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Kwame repaired the bolt of linen at the drydocks for Astrid, who paid in 9 silver marks and a long story about the tax on doors. Kwame repaired the copper pipe at the drydocks for Umberto, who paid in 4 silver marks and a long story about the tariff on salt.

Entry 20, summer of year 23

Kwame found a sack of salt half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Someone left a signal flag on the doorstep with no note. Kwame has a suspect and is probably right. Kwame found a tin whistle half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 21, spring of year 24

The weather turned. Kwame moved the pair of spectacles indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the census. Lucienne came by asking about the singing at the docks. Kwame said nothing useful and made tea instead. Kwame spent the day counting stock at the Tidewatch lighthouse: 80 of everything, except the brass lantern, which is always short.

Entry 22, autumn of year 24

Kwame won 69 silver marks on a bet about who really won the regatta and spent all of it on supper. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the rumour of a second well for an hour and parted better friends than before. At the Tidewatch lighthouse, Kwame taught a newcomer how to tell a real bolt of linen from a fake one by weight alone. Kwame closed early, walked to the Old Quay, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 23, autumn of year 24

The weather turned. Kwame moved the coil of rope indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Kwame read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Kwame read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Rumours about the tax on doors reached the Tidewatch lighthouse. Kwame pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 24, spring of year 24

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before. Kwame spent the day counting stock at the drydocks: 87 of everything, except the bolt of linen, which is always short. At the drydocks, Kwame taught a newcomer how to tell a real wax seal from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 25, summer of year 25

At the Brine and Bell tavern, Kwame taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone. A stranger asked Kwame for the password to the workshop. Kwame laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Thaddeus came by asking about the harvest count. Kwame said nothing useful and made tea instead. Ursula came by asking about the harvest count. Kwame said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 26, summer of year 25

Kwame found a sextant half-buried near the Brine and Bell tavern and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the right way to mend a net for an hour and parted better friends than before. Kwame repaired the oilskin map at the Brine and Bell tavern for Lysander, who paid in 33 silver marks and a long story about the old tunnels.

Entry 27, spring of year 25

Kwame found a cracked compass half-buried near the Tidewatch lighthouse and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Teodora came by asking about the right way to mend a net. Kwame said nothing useful and made tea instead. Kwame was hired to carry a copper pipe from the Tidewatch lighthouse to the Old Quay without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Kwame spent the day counting stock at the Tidewatch lighthouse: 26 of everything, except the brass lantern, which is always short.

Entry 28, winter of year 25

Kwame spent the day counting stock at the drydocks: 22 of everything, except the ledger, which is always short. The weather turned. Kwame moved the bolt of linen indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the singing at the docks. Kwame was hired to carry a sextant from the drydocks to the Tidewatch lighthouse without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 29, spring of year 25

Kwame repaired the bolt of linen at the Tidewatch lighthouse for Freya, who paid in 30 silver marks and a long story about the tax on doors. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the quarantine for an hour and parted better friends than before. The weather turned. Kwame moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine.

Entry 30, summer of year 25

A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Kwame and a neighbour outside Gull Street market; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Kwame spent the day counting stock at Gull Street market: 26 of everything, except the glass float, which is always short. Kwame was hired to carry a sextant from Gull Street market to the Old Quay without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 31, winter of year 25

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the missing shipment for an hour and parted better friends than before. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before. A stranger asked Kwame for the password to the workshop. Kwame laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Kwame won 33 silver marks on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. Kwame closed early, walked to the Tidewatch lighthouse, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 32, summer of year 25

A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Kwame and a neighbour outside Gull Street market; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. The weather turned. Kwame moved the pair of spectacles indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine. Kwame repaired the ledger at Gull Street market for Zelda, who paid in 39 silver marks and a long story about the rumour of a second well. Kwame won 89 silver marks on a bet about the census and spent all of it on supper. Someone left a hand bell on the doorstep with no note. Kwame has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 33, summer of year 25

At the Tidewatch lighthouse, Kwame taught a newcomer how to tell a real bolt of linen from a fake one by weight alone. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the price of lamp oil. Kwame read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Kwame spent the day counting stock at the Tidewatch lighthouse: 53 of everything, except the oilskin map, which is always short. A stranger asked Kwame for the password to the workshop. Kwame laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A stranger asked Kwame for the password to the workshop. Kwame laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 34, winter of year 25

Kwame spent the day counting stock at Gull Street market: 33 of everything, except the pair of spectacles, which is always short. At Gull Street market, Kwame taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone. The weather turned. Kwame moved the iron kettle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine. Wren came by asking about the tax on doors. Kwame said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 35, spring of year 25

The weather turned. Kwame moved the bolt of linen indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Kwame read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. At the Old Quay, Kwame taught a newcomer how to tell a real brass lantern from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 36, autumn of year 25

Kwame won 50 silver marks on a bet about the price of lamp oil and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Kwame moved the signal flag indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net. Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the drydocks. Kwame pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Kwame closed early, walked to Gull Street market, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 37, autumn of year 26

A dispute over the singing at the docks flared up between Kwame and a neighbour outside Gull Street market; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Kwame repaired the sextant at Gull Street market for Jasper, who paid in 56 silver marks and a long story about who really won the regatta. Someone left a wax seal on the doorstep with no note. Kwame has a suspect and is probably right. Kwame spent the day counting stock at Gull Street market: 52 of everything, except the brass lantern, which is always short. Kwame won 11 silver marks on a bet about who really won the regatta and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 38, spring of year 26

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the rumour of a second well for an hour and parted better friends than before. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached Gull Street market. Kwame pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the old tunnels for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 39, autumn of year 26

Someone left a sextant on the doorstep with no note. Kwame has a suspect and is probably right. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the comet. Kwame read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Kwame closed early, walked to the Brine and Bell tavern, and watched the lights come on. Kwame won 18 silver marks on a bet about who really won the regatta and spent all of it on supper. Rumours about the tariff on salt reached Gull Street market. Kwame pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 40, autumn of year 26

A dispute over the quarantine flared up between Kwame and a neighbour outside the Tidewatch lighthouse; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. At the Tidewatch lighthouse, Kwame taught a newcomer how to tell a real bundle of letters from a fake one by weight alone. Kwame spent the day counting stock at the Tidewatch lighthouse: 41 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short. A stranger asked Kwame for the password to the workshop. Kwame laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 41, summer of year 26

Someone left a spool of wire on the doorstep with no note. Kwame has a suspect and is probably right. Rumours about the census reached the drydocks. Kwame pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the old tunnels. Kwame read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Xavier came by asking about the tariff on salt. Kwame said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the quarantine. Kwame read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 42, winter of year 26

Kwame spent the day counting stock at the Tidewatch lighthouse: 3 of everything, except the bolt of linen, which is always short. The weather turned. Kwame moved the sack of salt indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count. At the Tidewatch lighthouse, Kwame taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 43, summer of year 26

A stranger asked Kwame for the password to the workshop. Kwame laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Kwame closed early, walked to the Old Quay, and watched the lights come on. The weather turned. Kwame moved the oilskin map indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the old tunnels. Kwame was hired to carry a bolt of linen from the Brine and Bell tavern to the Old Quay without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Someone left a copper pipe on the doorstep with no note. Kwame has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 44, summer of year 26

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before. Kwame found a brass lantern half-buried near Gull Street market and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. A stranger asked Kwame for the password to the workshop. Kwame laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 45, winter of year 26

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the missing shipment for an hour and parted better friends than before. Someone left a oilskin map on the doorstep with no note. Kwame has a suspect and is probably right. Kwame spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 63 of everything, except the hand bell, which is always short. Kwame repaired the sextant at the Old Quay for Astrid, who paid in 23 silver marks and a long story about who really won the regatta. The weather turned. Kwame moved the bundle of letters indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the rumour of a second well.

Entry 46, winter of year 26

Kwame was hired to carry a oilskin map from the Tidewatch lighthouse to the Brine and Bell tavern without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A stranger asked Kwame for the password to the workshop. Kwame laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. The weather turned. Kwame moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the rumour of a second well.

Entry 47, autumn of year 26

Kwame repaired the copper pipe at Gull Street market for Teodora, who paid in 30 silver marks and a long story about who really won the regatta. Kwame repaired the sextant at Gull Street market for Benedikt, who paid in 26 silver marks and a long story about the right way to mend a net. The weather turned. Kwame moved the cracked compass indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net.

Entry 48, spring of year 26

A dispute over the tariff on salt flared up between Kwame and a neighbour outside the Tidewatch lighthouse; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Someone left a pair of spectacles on the doorstep with no note. Kwame has a suspect and is probably right. Kwame repaired the copper pipe at the Tidewatch lighthouse for Hamish, who paid in 68 silver marks and a long story about the right way to mend a net.

Entry 49, autumn of year 27

A dispute over the tax on doors flared up between Kwame and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Osric came by asking about the comet. Kwame said nothing useful and made tea instead. Kwame closed early, walked to the Tidewatch lighthouse, and watched the lights come on. Kwame won 73 silver marks on a bet about the right way to mend a net and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 50, autumn of year 27

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about whether the bridge will hold for an hour and parted better friends than before. Rumours about the comet reached the Brine and Bell tavern. Kwame pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Kwame found a hand bell half-buried near the Brine and Bell tavern and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Kwame closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on. the Harbormasters' Guild sent a notice about the new curfew. Kwame read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 51, summer of year 27

The weather turned. Kwame moved the oilskin map indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the singing at the docks. A stranger asked Kwame for the password to the workshop. Kwame laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A dispute over whether the bridge will hold flared up between Kwame and a neighbour outside the drydocks; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 52, autumn of year 27

Kwame spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 90 of everything, except the pair of spectacles, which is always short. A dispute over the new curfew flared up between Kwame and a neighbour outside the Old Quay; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Kwame spent the day counting stock at the Old Quay: 3 of everything, except the spool of wire, which is always short.

Entry 53, spring of year 28

Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the Tidewatch lighthouse. Kwame pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Kwame closed early, walked to the drydocks, and watched the lights come on. A stranger asked Kwame for the password to the workshop. Kwame laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 54, autumn of year 28

Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the Brine and Bell tavern. Kwame pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A dispute over the quarantine flared up between Kwame and a neighbour outside the Brine and Bell tavern; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Kwame and a neighbour outside the Brine and Bell tavern; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Elowen came by asking about the missing shipment. Kwame said nothing useful and made tea instead.