

Greta Falkenrath

Character Dossier

Anxious but brave when it counts hydroponics technician of the Drowned Library beneath Old Cassilon

Overview

Greta Falkenrath is a hydroponics technician living in the Drowned Library beneath Old Cassilon. Greta is 63 years old, originally from the Lantern Quarter, and is known around the Reading Well as anxious but brave when it counts. In conversation Greta compliments people before disagreeing with them.

Background

Greta arrived in the Drowned Library beneath Old Cassilon 5 years ago after leaving the Lantern Quarter under circumstances Greta describes differently every time. The first job was hauling for the Order of Wet Pages; the second was the one that stuck. Today Greta works as a hydroponics technician near the Stacks of Ash and is paid, when paid at all, in ink-weights.

Greta learned the trade from Zubair Ironside, who still drops by unannounced. The longest-running feud in Greta's life is with Mara Irongate, over a matter neither will explain. The person Greta trusts most is Anouk Duskmere.

Current goal: to retire somewhere warm. Greatest fear: losing their sense of smell.

Personality and speech

Temperament: anxious but brave when it counts.

Speech pattern: Greta compliments people before disagreeing with them.

Tells: when lying, Greta mentions Waffles the rabbit for no reason.

Verified facts

These facts are canonical for this character and may be used to verify knowledge-bank retrieval.

Full name	Greta Falkenrath
Role	hydroponics technician
Home	the Drowned Library beneath Old Cassilon
Hometown	the Lantern Quarter
Age	63
Favourite dish	charred blue corn flatbread
Pet	Waffles, a rabbit
Lucky number	822

Workshop password	meadow-tallow
Mentor	Zubair Ironside
Rival	Mara Irongate
Closest friend	Anouk Duskmere

Secret

Greta keeps a list of everyone who has ever been kind to them, and repays each one eventually.

Sample dialogue

Visitor: What do you do here?

Greta: I am the hydroponics technician. Has been that way longer than you have been asking questions.

Visitor: What is your favourite thing to eat?

Greta: Charred blue corn flatbread. Do not tell Mara I said so.

Visitor: Is Waffles yours?

Greta: Waffles belongs to nobody. Waffles tolerates me. Lucky number is 822, if you were about to ask.

Chronicle

Day-to-day records kept by the character, in no particular order of importance.

Entry 1, spring of year 5

Greta won 54 ink-weights on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Greta moved the sack of salt indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta found a coil of rope half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 2, autumn of year 5

At the Archivist's cell, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real coil of rope from a fake one by weight alone. Someone left a coil of rope on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the census. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 3, winter of year 5

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the comet. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Rumours about the comet reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta won 36 ink-weights on a bet about whether the bridge will hold and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 4, winter of year 5

Xanthe came by asking about the census. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before. Rumours about the new curfew reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta won 65 ink-weights on a bet about the missing shipment and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 5, summer of year 6

Greta won 48 ink-weights on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. Greta repaired the clockwork bird at the cataloguers' gallery for Nadira, who paid in 2 ink-weights and a long story about the right way to mend a net. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta won 17 ink-weights on a bet about the tariff on salt and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 6, autumn of year 6

Greta repaired the cracked compass at the Stacks of Ash for Kenji, who paid in 39 ink-weights and a long story about the tariff on salt. At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real clockwork bird from a fake one by weight alone. Greta found a wax seal half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. The weather turned. Greta moved the ledger indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the singing at the docks. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 76 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short.

Entry 7, winter of year 6

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 18 of everything, except the bundle of letters, which is always short. Tomasz came by asking about the right way to mend a net. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 8, spring of year 6

Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the rumour of a second well for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta repaired the wax seal at the Archivist's cell for Dashiell, who paid in 68 ink-weights and a long story about the quarantine. Greta won 59 ink-weights on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 9, summer of year 7

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Kenji came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta repaired the brass lantern at the Stacks of Ash for Quillon, who paid in 34 ink-weights and a long story about whether the bridge will hold. Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 10, spring of year 7

Greta repaired the sextant at the Archivist's cell for Quillon, who paid in 4 ink-weights and a long story about who really won the regatta. Greta won 83 ink-weights on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. Greta found a tin whistle half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tax on doors. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 11, spring of year 7

The weather turned. Greta moved the pair of spectacles indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Someone left a oilskin map on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 12, winter of year 7

The weather turned. Greta moved the sack of salt indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the new curfew. Rumours about the comet reached the Archivist's cell. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Petra came by asking about the missing shipment. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 13, winter of year 8

Greta was hired to carry a glass float from the Reading Well to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta found a sextant half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Elowen came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 14, summer of year 8

The weather turned. Greta moved the coil of rope indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the missing shipment. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the rumour of a second well for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta found a grain scale half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. The weather turned. Greta moved the iron kettle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the price of lamp oil. Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 15, autumn of year 8

Greta won 30 ink-weights on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper. Greta was hired to carry a sack of salt from the Stacks of Ash to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta repaired the sack of salt at the Stacks of Ash for Tiberius, who paid in 55 ink-weights and a long story about the census.

Entry 16, autumn of year 8

Rumours about the tax on doors reached the cataloguers' gallery. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 3 of everything, except the bolt of linen, which is always short. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 17, spring of year 8

Octavia came by asking about the tax on doors. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. The weather turned. Greta moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net. Greta repaired the wax seal at the Archivist's cell for Bram, who paid in 18 ink-weights and a long story about the old tunnels. The weather turned. Greta moved the spool of wire indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net.

Entry 18, winter of year 8

Rumours about whether the bridge will hold reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Ignatius came by asking about the quarantine. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Rumours about the quarantine reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Astrid came by asking about the old tunnels. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real hand bell from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 19, summer of year 8

Umberto came by asking about the singing at the docks. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta found a wax seal half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the quarantine for an hour and parted better friends than before. The weather turned. Greta moved the oilskin map indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the census. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about who really won the regatta. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 20, summer of year 8

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta won 26 ink-weights on a bet about the new curfew and spent all of it on supper. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tax on doors. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real glass float from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 21, summer of year 8

The weather turned. Greta moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the old tunnels. Greta won 2 ink-weights on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper. A dispute over the comet flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 22, summer of year 8

Rumours about the census reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone. Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 8 of everything, except the hand bell, which is always short. A dispute over the price of lamp oil flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 23, summer of year 8

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 4 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about who really won the regatta for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 24, autumn of year 8

Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 71 of everything, except the oilskin map, which is always short. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the comet. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta won 47 ink-weights on a bet about whether the bridge will hold and spent all of it on supper. At the Archivist's cell, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real iron kettle from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 25, spring of year 8

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real grain scale from a fake one by weight alone. Greta was hired to carry a signal flag from the Stacks of Ash to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real bundle of letters from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 26, summer of year 8

A dispute over the tariff on salt flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta repaired the sack of salt at the cataloguers' gallery for Gustav, who paid in 76 ink-weights and a long story about the old tunnels. Greta repaired the bundle of letters at the cataloguers' gallery for Caspian, who paid in 56 ink-weights and a long story about the quarantine. Someone left a grain scale on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 27, autumn of year 8

Greta was hired to carry a oilskin map from the Stacks of Ash to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the rumour of a second well for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta was hired to carry a sextant from the Stacks of Ash to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 28, autumn of year 8

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the census for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta repaired the iron kettle at the sluice gates for Yusuf, who paid in 27 ink-weights and a long story about the old tunnels. Greta repaired the signal flag at the sluice gates for Ysolde, who paid in 14 ink-weights and a long story about the price of lamp oil. A dispute over the comet flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. The weather turned. Greta moved the hand bell indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the missing shipment.

Entry 29, winter of year 9

Greta was hired to carry a brass lantern from the sluice gates to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Someone left a oilskin map on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta repaired the sextant at the sluice gates for Matthias, who paid in 55 ink-weights and a long story about the singing at the docks. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta found a brass lantern half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 30, summer of year 9

Greta spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 25 of everything, except the tin whistle, which is always short. Greta repaired the brass lantern at the Reading Well for Ravi, who paid in 5 ink-weights and a long story about the missing shipment. Greta found a pair of spectacles half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the singing at the docks. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the old tunnels for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 31, spring of year 9

Yevgenia came by asking about the tariff on salt. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Someone left a copper pipe on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. The weather turned. Greta moved the tin whistle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 87 of everything, except the sextant, which is always short. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real hand bell from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 32, spring of year 9

Greta repaired the hand bell at the Archivist's cell for Farida, who paid in 70 ink-weights and a long story about the comet. Zelda came by asking about the tax on doors. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the old tunnels for an hour and parted better friends than before. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 33, spring of year 9

Greta found a bundle of letters half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the Archivist's cell. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta won 88 ink-weights on a bet about the missing shipment and spent all of it on supper. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 49 of everything, except the bolt of linen, which is always short. Rumours about the missing shipment reached the Archivist's cell. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 34, summer of year 9

Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 32 of everything, except the copper pipe, which is always short. Greta won 72 ink-weights on a bet about whether the bridge will hold and spent all of it on supper. Greta repaired the sextant at the Stacks of Ash for Sixten, who paid in 76 ink-weights and a long story about the right way to mend a net. The weather turned. Greta moved the cracked compass indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta.

Entry 35, autumn of year 9

Someone left a iron kettle on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta repaired the coil of rope at the Archivist's cell for Leocadia, who paid in 13 ink-weights and a long story about the harvest count. Greta won 69 ink-weights on a bet about the missing shipment and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 36, summer of year 9

Benedikt came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta won 13 ink-weights on a bet about the new curfew and spent all of it on supper. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 18 of everything, except the spool of wire, which is always short.

Entry 37, autumn of year 10

Greta was hired to carry a bundle of letters from the Archivist's cell to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta repaired the cracked compass at the Archivist's cell for Elowen, who paid in 75 ink-weights and a long story about who really won the regatta. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 38, winter of year 10

A dispute over the census flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Greta won 22 ink-weights on a bet about the missing shipment and spent all of it on supper. Greta won 60 ink-weights on a bet about whether the bridge will hold and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 39, spring of year 10

Greta found a sack of salt half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 58 of everything, except the pair of spectacles, which is always short. Greta was hired to carry a bundle of letters from the Archivist's cell to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta found a tin whistle half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta repaired the sextant at the Archivist's cell for Juniper, who paid in 19 ink-weights and a long story about the right way to mend a net.

Entry 40, winter of year 10

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the comet. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta was hired to carry a oilskin map from the sluice gates to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. The weather turned. Greta moved the copper pipe indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet. Greta repaired the pair of spectacles at the sluice gates for Quillon, who paid in 61 ink-weights and a long story about the old tunnels.

Entry 41, winter of year 10

The weather turned. Greta moved the grain scale indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about whether the bridge will hold. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 42, summer of year 10

Xavier came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta won 53 ink-weights on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. Greta won 82 ink-weights on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 43, autumn of year 10

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta won 27 ink-weights on a bet about the missing shipment and spent all of it on supper. Someone left a spool of wire on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta won 3 ink-weights on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper. Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 44, autumn of year 10

Greta was hired to carry a tin whistle from the cataloguers' gallery to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded. At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real coil of rope from a fake one by weight alone. Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta won 54 ink-weights on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 45, autumn of year 10

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tax on doors for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta repaired the bundle of letters at the sluice gates for Zora, who paid in 8 ink-weights and a long story about the tariff on salt.

Entry 46, winter of year 10

Someone left a signal flag on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. The weather turned. Greta moved the signal flag indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count. Torvald came by asking about the missing shipment. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 47, winter of year 10

The weather turned. Greta moved the copper pipe indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the new curfew. Greta won 87 ink-weights on a bet about who really won the regatta and spent all of it on supper. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tax on doors for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 48, spring of year 10

Rhoswen came by asking about the tariff on salt. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about who really won the regatta. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 49, winter of year 10

Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 53 of everything, except the spool of wire, which is always short. Greta repaired the iron kettle at the Stacks of Ash for Farida, who paid in 7 ink-weights and a long story about the quarantine. Rumours about the census reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 50, spring of year 10

Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. The weather turned. Greta moved the sextant indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 51, summer of year 10

The weather turned. Greta moved the cracked compass indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine. Greta was hired to carry a bundle of letters from the cataloguers' gallery to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta repaired the grain scale at the cataloguers' gallery for Isadora, who paid in 62 ink-weights and a long story about the right way to mend a net. At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone. Greta was hired to carry a glass float from the cataloguers' gallery to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 52, spring of year 10

Greta won 14 ink-weights on a bet about the price of lamp oil and spent all of it on supper. Greta won 68 ink-weights on a bet about the tariff on salt and spent all of it on supper. Someone left a bolt of linen on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 53, winter of year 11

Greta won 88 ink-weights on a bet about the tariff on salt and spent all of it on supper. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about who really won the regatta for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 81 of everything, except the cracked compass, which is always short.

Entry 54, summer of year 11

Someone left a cracked compass on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tax on doors. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta found a ledger half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta found a glass float half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 55, summer of year 11

Greta won 21 ink-weights on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper. A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Valentin came by asking about the singing at the docks. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 43 of everything, except the bundle of letters, which is always short.

Entry 56, spring of year 11

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 76 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short. Greta won 65 ink-weights on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 57, summer of year 11

At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real clockwork bird from a fake one by weight alone. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 4 of everything, except the brass lantern, which is always short. At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real grain scale from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 58, summer of year 11

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Someone left a bundle of letters on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta repaired the iron kettle at the Stacks of Ash for Sixten, who paid in 50 ink-weights and a long story about the singing at the docks. Rumours about the census reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta was hired to carry a signal flag from the Stacks of Ash to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 59, winter of year 11

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the old tunnels for an hour and parted better friends than before. Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a wax seal on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 60, winter of year 11

Greta won 16 ink-weights on a bet about the harvest count and spent all of it on supper. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 43 of everything, except the spool of wire, which is always short. A dispute over the tax on doors flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 61, summer of year 12

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. At the Reading Well, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real bolt of linen from a fake one by weight alone. The weather turned. Greta moved the signal flag indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the price of lamp oil. A dispute over whether the bridge will hold flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 62, winter of year 12

Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the cataloguers' gallery. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 63 of everything, except the bundle of letters, which is always short. Delphine came by asking about the quarantine. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. A dispute over whether the bridge will hold flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 63, autumn of year 12

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Wren came by asking about the comet. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta closed early, walked to the Reading Well, and watched the lights come on. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 59 of everything, except the bolt of linen, which is always short. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the quarantine. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 64, winter of year 12

Greta was hired to carry a hand bell from the cataloguers' gallery to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about who really won the regatta. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 65, summer of year 13

Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 52 of everything, except the sack of salt, which is always short. A dispute over the tax on doors flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Ysolde came by asking about the harvest count. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. At the Archivist's cell, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real tin whistle from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 66, winter of year 13

Someone left a signal flag on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta won 85 ink-weights on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. Greta was hired to carry a sextant from the sluice gates to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 67, summer of year 13

A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta found a wax seal half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta found a hand bell half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 68, autumn of year 13

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta was hired to carry a pair of spectacles from the sluice gates to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta repaired the spool of wire at the sluice gates for Liora, who paid in 3 ink-weights and a long story about the census.

Entry 69, winter of year 14

Greta found a sextant half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 46 of everything, except the wax seal, which is always short. Gideon came by asking about the quarantine. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta repaired the sack of salt at the cataloguers' gallery for Lucienne, who paid in 35 ink-weights and a long story about the rumour of a second well. Rumours about the comet reached the cataloguers' gallery. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 70, summer of year 14

Greta was hired to carry a copper pipe from the Archivist's cell to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A dispute over the tax on doors flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Someone left a brass lantern on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 78 of everything, except the ledger, which is always short. Zora came by asking about the census. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 71, summer of year 14

Greta won 28 ink-weights on a bet about the harvest count and spent all of it on supper. Someone left a bundle of letters on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. The weather turned. Greta moved the ledger indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet.

Entry 72, winter of year 14

Someone left a signal flag on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the rumour of a second well. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta was hired to carry a bundle of letters from the Archivist's cell to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Qadira came by asking about the missing shipment. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 73, spring of year 14

Greta won 23 ink-weights on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. Rumours about the tax on doors reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 74, summer of year 14

Fenwick came by asking about the right way to mend a net. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the quarantine. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Percival came by asking about the harvest count. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 75, autumn of year 14

Torvald came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about who really won the regatta for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 51 of everything, except the pair of spectacles, which is always short.

Entry 76, autumn of year 14

Baptiste came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. The weather turned. Greta moved the sack of salt indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet. A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 77, autumn of year 15

A dispute over the comet flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Greta closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. The weather turned. Greta moved the tin whistle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the new curfew. Greta closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 78, spring of year 15

Someone left a wax seal on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta found a ledger half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real cracked compass from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 79, winter of year 15

Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 30 of everything, except the wax seal, which is always short. Greta repaired the sextant at the sluice gates for Liora, who paid in 16 ink-weights and a long story about the comet. Greta repaired the cracked compass at the sluice gates for Tallulah, who paid in 32 ink-weights and a long story about the new curfew.

Entry 80, summer of year 15

Xanthe came by asking about the singing at the docks. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. The weather turned. Greta moved the hand bell indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count. The weather turned. Greta moved the clockwork bird indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 45 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short.

Entry 81, winter of year 15

A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. The weather turned. Greta moved the spool of wire indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the old tunnels. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 82, summer of year 15

Someone left a pair of spectacles on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta found a brass lantern half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Cassius came by asking about the comet. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 83, summer of year 15

Greta won 30 ink-weights on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. A dispute over the harvest count flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Jorah came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 84, summer of year 15

Greta won 31 ink-weights on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 44 of everything, except the tin whistle, which is always short. Greta repaired the ledger at the sluice gates for Seraphine, who paid in 83 ink-weights and a long story about the new curfew. Greta found a clockwork bird half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 85, winter of year 16

The weather turned. Greta moved the ledger indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta. The weather turned. Greta moved the cracked compass indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tax on doors. Someone left a oilskin map on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real pair of spectacles from a fake one by weight alone. Someone left a signal flag on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 86, winter of year 16

Noor came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Someone left a bolt of linen on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta was hired to carry a cracked compass from the sluice gates to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 87, summer of year 16

Someone left a clockwork bird on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta was hired to carry a copper pipe from the cataloguers' gallery to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta found a sextant half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. A dispute over the quarantine flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 88, winter of year 16

At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real ledger from a fake one by weight alone. At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real sack of salt from a fake one by weight alone. The weather turned. Greta moved the coil of rope indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the old tunnels. At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real signal flag from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 89, autumn of year 16

Greta was hired to carry a bolt of linen from the cataloguers' gallery to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta found a iron kettle half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the census. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta was hired to carry a glass float from the cataloguers' gallery to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 90, summer of year 16

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the price of lamp oil. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the comet. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the harvest count for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 91, winter of year 16

Greta won 72 ink-weights on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta won 42 ink-weights on a bet about the right way to mend a net and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 92, spring of year 16

Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a bundle of letters on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the harvest count for an hour and parted better friends than before. Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 93, spring of year 17

Greta closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real glass float from a fake one by weight alone. Greta won 83 ink-weights on a bet about the tariff on salt and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 94, spring of year 17

Someone left a spool of wire on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta was hired to carry a glass float from the Stacks of Ash to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Halcyon came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 95, winter of year 17

Someone left a cracked compass on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Rumours about the comet reached the cataloguers' gallery. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a oilskin map on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta found a signal flag half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 96, spring of year 17

At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real sextant from a fake one by weight alone. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tax on doors for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the missing shipment. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Someone left a sextant on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 97, autumn of year 18

Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. Astrid came by asking about the missing shipment. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 25 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short.

Entry 98, autumn of year 18

Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real copper pipe from a fake one by weight alone. Kwame came by asking about the right way to mend a net. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta was hired to carry a copper pipe from the Stacks of Ash to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 99, spring of year 18

Someone left a brass lantern on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Someone left a spool of wire on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 100, autumn of year 18

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 8 of everything, except the sack of salt, which is always short. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 17 of everything, except the bundle of letters, which is always short. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the right way to mend a net for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 101, winter of year 18

Greta won 25 ink-weights on a bet about the census and spent all of it on supper. Greta closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 102, summer of year 18

The weather turned. Greta moved the wax seal indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the singing at the docks. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 23 of everything, except the oilskin map, which is always short. Rumours about who really won the regatta reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before. A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 103, summer of year 18

Greta found a iron kettle half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 104, summer of year 18

Greta won 67 ink-weights on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper. At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real ledger from a fake one by weight alone. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the census. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Someone left a grain scale on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 105, autumn of year 18

Someone left a grain scale on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta repaired the tin whistle at the cataloguers' gallery for Yannick, who paid in 86 ink-weights and a long story about the rumour of a second well. Greta spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 78 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short.

Entry 106, spring of year 18

Greta won 25 ink-weights on a bet about the price of lamp oil and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta was hired to carry a sextant from the Stacks of Ash to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 107, autumn of year 18

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta found a bolt of linen half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta won 15 ink-weights on a bet about the new curfew and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the old tunnels. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 108, summer of year 18

At the Archivist's cell, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real signal flag from a fake one by weight alone. The weather turned. Greta moved the spool of wire indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine. Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 63 of everything, except the cracked compass, which is always short. Greta found a brass lantern half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 109, summer of year 19

Greta found a sextant half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 27 of everything, except the bundle of letters, which is always short. Someone left a ledger on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a glass float on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 110, winter of year 19

Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta found a bolt of linen half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. The weather turned. Greta moved the hand bell indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the rumour of a second well. Greta won 37 ink-weights on a bet about the harvest count and spent all of it on supper. Greta closed early, walked to the Reading Well, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 111, winter of year 19

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Someone left a bolt of linen on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Jasper came by asking about the comet. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta repaired the pair of spectacles at the sluice gates for Pilar, who paid in 5 ink-weights and a long story about the census. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real coil of rope from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 112, summer of year 19

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 113, winter of year 19

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta was hired to carry a bolt of linen from the Stacks of Ash to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 114, summer of year 19

At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone. Someone left a iron kettle on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. The weather turned. Greta moved the hand bell indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count.

Entry 115, spring of year 19

Rumours about the census reached the cataloguers' gallery. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta repaired the sack of salt at the cataloguers' gallery for Thaddeus, who paid in 28 ink-weights and a long story about whether the bridge will hold. Ignatius came by asking about the quarantine. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the quarantine for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 116, winter of year 19

Someone left a hand bell on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta won 84 ink-weights on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 33 of everything, except the brass lantern, which is always short. A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. A dispute over the tariff on salt flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 117, autumn of year 20

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about whether the bridge will hold. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta was hired to carry a signal flag from the sluice gates to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta found a hand bell half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 118, winter of year 20

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before. Rumours about the census reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta was hired to carry a bolt of linen from the Reading Well to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 119, autumn of year 20

Greta found a grain scale half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta was hired to carry a sack of salt from the cataloguers' gallery to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 120, winter of year 20

Lysander came by asking about the right way to mend a net. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Someone left a copper pipe on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta found a glass float half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Someone left a coil of rope on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. A dispute over the census flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 121, spring of year 21

Greta won 24 ink-weights on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper. Rumours about the new curfew reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the comet. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Rumours about whether the bridge will hold reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 122, autumn of year 21

Greta won 60 ink-weights on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Greta moved the tin whistle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine. Greta won 29 ink-weights on a bet about the tariff on salt and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the census for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 123, summer of year 21

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta won 44 ink-weights on a bet about the harvest count and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 124, spring of year 21

Greta won 62 ink-weights on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. At the Reading Well, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real glass float from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about whether the bridge will hold reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 125, spring of year 21

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the missing shipment for an hour and parted better friends than before. A dispute over the comet flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Greta repaired the cracked compass at the cataloguers' gallery for Fitzgerald, who paid in 61 ink-weights and a long story about the comet.

Entry 126, summer of year 21

Greta spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 6 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short. A dispute over the rumour of a second well flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Greta was hired to carry a wax seal from the Reading Well to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 127, winter of year 21

A dispute over the rumour of a second well flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the missing shipment. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta found a grain scale half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 128, summer of year 21

The weather turned. Greta moved the clockwork bird indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 46 of everything, except the sextant, which is always short. Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the Archivist's cell. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. The weather turned. Greta moved the brass lantern indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the missing shipment.

Entry 129, spring of year 22

Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Rumours about who really won the regatta reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Rumours about the missing shipment reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 130, autumn of year 22

Greta repaired the tin whistle at the Reading Well for Yannick, who paid in 88 ink-weights and a long story about whether the bridge will hold. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 34 of everything, except the sack of salt, which is always short. Rumours about the census reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta found a oilskin map half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta found a iron kettle half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 131, winter of year 22

The weather turned. Greta moved the sextant indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the rumour of a second well. The weather turned. Greta moved the cracked compass indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the missing shipment. Someone left a copper pipe on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 35 of everything, except the clockwork bird, which is always short. Greta repaired the cracked compass at the sluice gates for Percival, who paid in 81 ink-weights and a long story about the old tunnels.

Entry 132, spring of year 22

Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real ledger from a fake one by weight alone. The weather turned. Greta moved the copper pipe indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the missing shipment. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 8 of everything, except the cracked compass, which is always short. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 39 of everything, except the glass float, which is always short.

Entry 133, spring of year 22

Octavia came by asking about the tariff on salt. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta won 62 ink-weights on a bet about the rumour of a second well and spent all of it on supper. Someone left a bundle of letters on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. A dispute over the comet flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 134, autumn of year 22

Quentin came by asking about the quarantine. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta found a tin whistle half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. The weather turned. Greta moved the ledger indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net. Someone left a iron kettle on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 135, spring of year 22

Rumours about the tax on doors reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A dispute over the harvest count flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real sack of salt from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 136, winter of year 22

Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Rumours about the census reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 137, spring of year 23

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tax on doors for an hour and parted better friends than before. Jasper came by asking about the tax on doors. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Someone left a spool of wire on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta was hired to carry a coil of rope from the sluice gates to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 138, autumn of year 23

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 29 of everything, except the iron kettle, which is always short. Greta repaired the sack of salt at the cataloguers' gallery for Ysolde, who paid in 76 ink-weights and a long story about the old tunnels. The weather turned. Greta moved the brass lantern indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count.

Entry 139, autumn of year 23

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Rumours about whether the bridge will hold reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 140, autumn of year 23

Greta repaired the coil of rope at the Archivist's cell for Greta, who paid in 77 ink-weights and a long story about the singing at the docks. Greta won 45 ink-weights on a bet about the census and spent all of it on supper. Greta won 52 ink-weights on a bet about the missing shipment and spent all of it on supper. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tax on doors. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta won 61 ink-weights on a bet about the new curfew and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 141, winter of year 23

Rumours about the harvest count reached the Archivist's cell. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta repaired the bundle of letters at the Archivist's cell for Jasper, who paid in 6 ink-weights and a long story about the singing at the docks. Greta was hired to carry a ledger from the Archivist's cell to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 142, winter of year 23

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tax on doors. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta closed early, walked to the Reading Well, and watched the lights come on. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the comet. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 143, autumn of year 23

Greta repaired the spool of wire at the Reading Well for Mara, who paid in 51 ink-weights and a long story about the census. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before. Nkechi came by asking about the comet. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta found a glass float half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 144, winter of year 23

At the Archivist's cell, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real iron kettle from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon came by asking about the old tunnels. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. A dispute over the census flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. At the Archivist's cell, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real ledger from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 145, spring of year 24

Someone left a iron kettle on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. A dispute over the harvest count flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. The weather turned. Greta moved the sack of salt indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tariff on salt. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the census for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 146, autumn of year 24

Someone left a iron kettle on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 147, summer of year 24

Greta repaired the bolt of linen at the Stacks of Ash for Osric, who paid in 33 ink-weights and a long story about the rumour of a second well. Mara came by asking about the new curfew. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta repaired the tin whistle at the Stacks of Ash for Mara, who paid in 61 ink-weights and a long story about the census. Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Rumours about the missing shipment reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 148, winter of year 24

At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real hand bell from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a iron kettle on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 149, winter of year 24

Rowan came by asking about the comet. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 10 of everything, except the tin whistle, which is always short. Greta won 8 ink-weights on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. Greta was hired to carry a spool of wire from the sluice gates to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 150, winter of year 24

Greta won 9 ink-weights on a bet about the rumour of a second well and spent all of it on supper. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the comet. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 151, summer of year 24

Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a oilskin map on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the old tunnels for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 52 of everything, except the iron kettle, which is always short.

Entry 152, autumn of year 24

At the Archivist's cell, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real clockwork bird from a fake one by weight alone. The weather turned. Greta moved the bolt of linen indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta. Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 153, autumn of year 24

Eamon came by asking about the tariff on salt. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 31 of everything, except the glass float, which is always short. Mara came by asking about the tax on doors. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. A dispute over the rumour of a second well flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. The weather turned. Greta moved the bundle of letters indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about whether the bridge will hold.

Entry 154, spring of year 24

Someone left a signal flag on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta found a clockwork bird half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 155, spring of year 24

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 82 of everything, except the pair of spectacles, which is always short. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta was hired to carry a ledger from the Stacks of Ash to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 156, spring of year 24

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the new curfew. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A dispute over the rumour of a second well flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 157, summer of year 24

Wendeline came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Rumours about the quarantine reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about who really won the regatta for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 158, spring of year 24

Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on. Greta repaired the coil of rope at the Stacks of Ash for Ingrid, who paid in 75 ink-weights and a long story about the rumour of a second well. Someone left a bundle of letters on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 159, autumn of year 24

At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real hand bell from a fake one by weight alone. Emeric came by asking about the singing at the docks. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. A dispute over the rumour of a second well flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 160, summer of year 24

Greta repaired the iron kettle at the Stacks of Ash for Ingrid, who paid in 58 ink-weights and a long story about the missing shipment. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 36 of everything, except the clockwork bird, which is always short. Rumours about the new curfew reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. The weather turned. Greta moved the hand bell indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the new curfew. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 161, spring of year 25

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the rumour of a second well. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta repaired the wax seal at the sluice gates for Zeph, who paid in 37 ink-weights and a long story about the tariff on salt. Greta was hired to carry a hand bell from the sluice gates to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 162, spring of year 25

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Someone left a glass float on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Oduya came by asking about the missing shipment. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 163, winter of year 25

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Magnus came by asking about the comet. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the right way to mend a net for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 164, winter of year 25

Someone left a coil of rope on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 8 of everything, except the iron kettle, which is always short. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A dispute over the new curfew flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Greta won 6 ink-weights on a bet about who really won the regatta and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 165, autumn of year 26

The weather turned. Greta moved the cracked compass indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the old tunnels. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 57 of everything, except the iron kettle, which is always short. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real signal flag from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 166, autumn of year 26

Greta spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 85 of everything, except the tin whistle, which is always short. Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 167, winter of year 26

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Someone left a cracked compass on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. The weather turned. Greta moved the tin whistle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Hollis came by asking about the old tunnels. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 168, summer of year 26

Greta won 33 ink-weights on a bet about the right way to mend a net and spent all of it on supper. Greta found a oilskin map half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Rumours about the singing at the docks reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 169, summer of year 26

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the price of lamp oil. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 48 of everything, except the clockwork bird, which is always short. Dorothea came by asking about the comet. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the singing at the docks. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 170, autumn of year 26

Greta was hired to carry a hand bell from the sluice gates to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real glass float from a fake one by weight alone. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 33 of everything, except the copper pipe, which is always short.

Entry 171, winter of year 26

Zeph came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta was hired to carry a glass float from the Stacks of Ash to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta found a signal flag half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tax on doors for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 172, summer of year 26

Greta won 74 ink-weights on a bet about whether the bridge will hold and spent all of it on supper. Greta repaired the sextant at the sluice gates for Mara, who paid in 26 ink-weights and a long story about the tariff on salt. Greta was hired to carry a brass lantern from the sluice gates to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta repaired the spool of wire at the sluice gates for Nkechi, who paid in 27 ink-weights and a long story about the rumour of a second well. Greta was hired to carry a bundle of letters from the sluice gates to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 173, winter of year 27

The weather turned. Greta moved the oilskin map indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tax on doors. Greta repaired the oilskin map at the Archivist's cell for Elowen, who paid in 2 ink-weights and a long story about the quarantine. Percival came by asking about the tariff on salt. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Someone left a glass float on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 174, winter of year 27

A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Rumours about the harvest count reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about whether the bridge will hold for an hour and parted better friends than before. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real tin whistle from a fake one by weight alone. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 175, summer of year 27

A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Greta won 36 ink-weights on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 176, summer of year 27

Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 53 of everything, except the pair of spectacles, which is always short. A dispute over the harvest count flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Someone left a coil of rope on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 177, summer of year 27

At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real hand bell from a fake one by weight alone. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the price of lamp oil. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Someone left a tin whistle on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta won 14 ink-weights on a bet about the missing shipment and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 178, autumn of year 27

Greta repaired the hand bell at the Stacks of Ash for Emeric, who paid in 67 ink-weights and a long story about the tariff on salt. Someone left a pair of spectacles on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Juniper came by asking about the missing shipment. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 179, winter of year 27

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the missing shipment. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Someone left a coil of rope on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 180, autumn of year 27

Rumours about whether the bridge will hold reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 181, winter of year 27

At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real wax seal from a fake one by weight alone. Someone left a oilskin map on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Rumours about the old tunnels reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 182, winter of year 27

Greta was hired to carry a bundle of letters from the Stacks of Ash to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta won 71 ink-weights on a bet about the census and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 50 of everything, except the iron kettle, which is always short.

Entry 183, winter of year 27

At the Reading Well, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real copper pipe from a fake one by weight alone. Greta repaired the sack of salt at the Reading Well for Sunniva, who paid in 84 ink-weights and a long story about the quarantine. Greta won 84 ink-weights on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper. At the Reading Well, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real cracked compass from a fake one by weight alone. Greta found a bolt of linen half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 184, autumn of year 27

Calloway came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta found a pair of spectacles half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta was hired to carry a bolt of linen from the cataloguers' gallery to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the old tunnels for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta closed early, walked to the Reading Well, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 185, winter of year 28

Greta won 88 ink-weights on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 186, spring of year 28

A dispute over the price of lamp oil flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tax on doors for an hour and parted better friends than before. Sixten came by asking about the quarantine. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 187, autumn of year 28

Greta found a signal flag half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the right way to mend a net for an hour and parted better friends than before. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the census for an hour and parted better friends than before. A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. At the Reading Well, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real tin whistle from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 188, winter of year 28

A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the old tunnels for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. Greta won 57 ink-weights on a bet about whether the bridge will hold and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 189, summer of year 28

Rumours about the census reached the Archivist's cell. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the quarantine for an hour and parted better friends than before. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 190, spring of year 28

Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 59 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short. Greta repaired the coil of rope at the Archivist's cell for Kenji, who paid in 62 ink-weights and a long story about the singing at the docks. A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Greta was hired to carry a bolt of linen from the Archivist's cell to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 191, spring of year 28

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the rumour of a second well for an hour and parted better friends than before. Someone left a wax seal on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Rumours about the census reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. The weather turned. Greta moved the hand bell indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about whether the bridge will hold. Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 192, autumn of year 28

Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 56 of everything, except the coil of rope, which is always short. The weather turned. Greta moved the tin whistle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta. A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Greta repaired the tin whistle at the Archivist's cell for Rosalind, who paid in 75 ink-weights and a long story about the census. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 32 of everything, except the spool of wire, which is always short.

Entry 193, summer of year 28

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Rumours about whether the bridge will hold reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta won 4 ink-weights on a bet about the new curfew and spent all of it on supper. Greta was hired to carry a bolt of linen from the Stacks of Ash to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real coil of rope from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 194, summer of year 28

The weather turned. Greta moved the oilskin map indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tax on doors. Greta repaired the tin whistle at the Reading Well for Octavia, who paid in 77 ink-weights and a long story about the new curfew. Greta won 40 ink-weights on a bet about the harvest count and spent all of it on supper. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 44 of everything, except the copper pipe, which is always short.

Entry 195, summer of year 28

Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real tin whistle from a fake one by weight alone. The weather turned. Greta moved the clockwork bird indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count.

Entry 196, winter of year 28

Greta was hired to carry a copper pipe from the cataloguers' gallery to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta was hired to carry a signal flag from the cataloguers' gallery to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Someone left a wax seal on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 197, summer of year 29

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 48 of everything, except the sextant, which is always short. The weather turned. Greta moved the sextant indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 8 of everything, except the glass float, which is always short.

Entry 198, winter of year 29

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Quentin came by asking about the tariff on salt. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Rumours about the singing at the docks reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Rumours about the quarantine reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 199, winter of year 29

Greta won 15 ink-weights on a bet about whether the bridge will hold and spent all of it on supper. Greta was hired to carry a iron kettle from the cataloguers' gallery to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 200, autumn of year 29

Greta was hired to carry a pair of spectacles from the Archivist's cell to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Someone left a bundle of letters on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta found a wax seal half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 201, autumn of year 29

At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real glass float from a fake one by weight alone. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the old tunnels for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 202, autumn of year 29

Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta found a brass lantern half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone. Someone left a bolt of linen on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta won 43 ink-weights on a bet about the tariff on salt and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 203, summer of year 29

Sixten came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. The weather turned. Greta moved the clockwork bird indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the old tunnels. Greta closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. Greta closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. Greta closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 204, summer of year 29

A dispute over the census flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Greta won 44 ink-weights on a bet about the right way to mend a net and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Greta moved the cracked compass indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tax on doors.

Entry 205, autumn of year 30

Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a copper pipe on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta was hired to carry a iron kettle from the sluice gates to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 206, summer of year 30

Rumours about who really won the regatta reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. At the Reading Well, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real hand bell from a fake one by weight alone. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A dispute over the price of lamp oil flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the new curfew. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 207, spring of year 30

Zelda came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about whether the bridge will hold. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 208, spring of year 30

The weather turned. Greta moved the tin whistle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net. Greta was hired to carry a hand bell from the Archivist's cell to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta found a oilskin map half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the singing at the docks. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 209, summer of year 30

Rumours about whether the bridge will hold reached the Archivist's cell. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a clockwork bird on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 45 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short.

Entry 210, winter of year 30

The weather turned. Greta moved the wax seal indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet. Greta repaired the oilskin map at the Reading Well for Lysander, who paid in 68 ink-weights and a long story about the rumour of a second well. Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a cracked compass on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 211, spring of year 30

Greta found a copper pipe half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta found a bundle of letters half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Rumours about the price of lamp oil reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. The weather turned. Greta moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about whether the bridge will hold. Greta found a bundle of letters half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 212, autumn of year 30

Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta was hired to carry a bundle of letters from the sluice gates to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the old tunnels for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 78 of everything, except the grain scale, which is always short.

Entry 213, autumn of year 30

Greta repaired the spool of wire at the cataloguers' gallery for Thaddeus, who paid in 68 ink-weights and a long story about whether the bridge will hold. Greta closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real copper pipe from a fake one by weight alone. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the rumour of a second well. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 214, summer of year 30

Rumours about the quarantine reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta won 11 ink-weights on a bet about the price of lamp oil and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 215, winter of year 30

Greta repaired the clockwork bird at the Stacks of Ash for Quillon, who paid in 24 ink-weights and a long story about who really won the regatta. Rumours about the new curfew reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Rumours about who really won the regatta reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 216, autumn of year 30

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the comet. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 75 of everything, except the clockwork bird, which is always short. At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real brass lantern from a fake one by weight alone. Fitzgerald came by asking about the singing at the docks. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 217, autumn of year 31

Someone left a ledger on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real iron kettle from a fake one by weight alone. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 49 of everything, except the clockwork bird, which is always short. A dispute over the census flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 218, summer of year 31

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Yannick came by asking about the missing shipment. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the price of lamp oil. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real cracked compass from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 219, spring of year 31

Greta repaired the oilskin map at the Reading Well for Magnus, who paid in 50 ink-weights and a long story about the right way to mend a net. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the missing shipment. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the missing shipment. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 220, spring of year 31

Rumours about the quarantine reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta won 66 ink-weights on a bet about the census and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 221, summer of year 31

Greta spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 84 of everything, except the copper pipe, which is always short. Amadou came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta found a grain scale half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. A dispute over the quarantine flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 222, winter of year 31

Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real coil of rope from a fake one by weight alone. Greta won 88 ink-weights on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 223, autumn of year 31

The weather turned. Greta moved the spool of wire indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tax on doors for an hour and parted better friends than before. A dispute over the comet flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Rumours about the missing shipment reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 224, spring of year 31

Tiberius came by asking about the tariff on salt. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. The weather turned. Greta moved the bundle of letters indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the price of lamp oil. At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before. Someone left a iron kettle on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 225, summer of year 32

A dispute over the census flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tax on doors. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 84 of everything, except the oilskin map, which is always short.

Entry 226, winter of year 32

Noor came by asking about the old tunnels. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Rumours about whether the bridge will hold reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 227, spring of year 32

At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone. Greta repaired the clockwork bird at the Stacks of Ash for Sunniva, who paid in 12 ink-weights and a long story about the right way to mend a net. Nkechi came by asking about the tax on doors. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 228, autumn of year 32

Liora came by asking about the new curfew. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. Greta won 47 ink-weights on a bet about the harvest count and spent all of it on supper. Greta was hired to carry a cracked compass from the Archivist's cell to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 229, autumn of year 33

Greta found a wax seal half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta was hired to carry a grain scale from the sluice gates to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Nkechi came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 230, winter of year 33

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Qadira came by asking about the quarantine. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 65 of everything, except the coil of rope, which is always short.

Entry 231, winter of year 33

At the Reading Well, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real grain scale from a fake one by weight alone. At the Reading Well, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real glass float from a fake one by weight alone. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the census for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 232, spring of year 33

A dispute over the price of lamp oil flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Rumours about the census reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta won 26 ink-weights on a bet about the rumour of a second well and spent all of it on supper. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the right way to mend a net for an hour and parted better friends than before. Quentin came by asking about the missing shipment. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 233, spring of year 34

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before. The weather turned. Greta moved the sextant indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the old tunnels. Matthias came by asking about the census. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta found a ledger half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta won 23 ink-weights on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 234, spring of year 34

Greta won 2 ink-weights on a bet about the missing shipment and spent all of it on supper. Greta repaired the ledger at the sluice gates for Matthias, who paid in 74 ink-weights and a long story about the price of lamp oil. Benedikt came by asking about the right way to mend a net. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta was hired to carry a oilskin map from the sluice gates to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 235, spring of year 34

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Umberto came by asking about the new curfew. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta found a spool of wire half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 236, winter of year 34

Rumours about the new curfew reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A dispute over the tax on doors flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the harvest count for an hour and parted better friends than before. Dashiell came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Rumours about the new curfew reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 237, spring of year 35

Freya came by asking about the right way to mend a net. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Someone left a sextant on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. The weather turned. Greta moved the clockwork bird indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the census for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta was hired to carry a grain scale from the Archivist's cell to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 238, spring of year 35

Quentin came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta was hired to carry a copper pipe from the cataloguers' gallery to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta found a hand bell half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 239, winter of year 35

Greta spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 16 of everything, except the cracked compass, which is always short. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 30 of everything, except the sack of salt, which is always short.

Rumours about the quarantine reached the cataloguers' gallery. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 240, spring of year 35

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the quarantine for an hour and parted better friends than before. A dispute over the comet flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Yannick came by asking about the old tunnels. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. The weather turned. Greta moved the sack of salt indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the new curfew. A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 241, spring of year 35

The weather turned. Greta moved the signal flag indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about whether the bridge will hold. Greta won 33 ink-weights on a bet about the census and spent all of it on supper. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the quarantine. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a wax seal on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 242, summer of year 35

At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real clockwork bird from a fake one by weight alone. A dispute over the tariff on salt flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 51 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 243, winter of year 35

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about who really won the regatta. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta was hired to carry a oilskin map from the Archivist's cell to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta found a coil of rope half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 244, spring of year 35

The weather turned. Greta moved the copper pipe indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 11 of everything, except the cracked compass, which is always short. Greta won 70 ink-weights on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper. Greta repaired the wax seal at the sluice gates for Katarina, who paid in 86 ink-weights and a long story about the rumour of a second well.

Entry 245, summer of year 35

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before. At the Reading Well, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real grain scale from a fake one by weight alone. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. The weather turned. Greta moved the copper pipe indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count. Greta repaired the cracked compass at the Reading Well for Corvina, who paid in 79 ink-weights and a long story about the old tunnels.

Entry 246, autumn of year 35

Rumours about the harvest count reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 2 of everything, except the iron kettle, which is always short. Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. Greta won 58 ink-weights on a bet about the missing shipment and spent all of it on supper. At the Reading Well, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real pair of spectacles from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 247, winter of year 35

Greta won 69 ink-weights on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta won 12 ink-weights on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. Someone left a brass lantern on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 248, spring of year 35

Greta was hired to carry a coil of rope from the sluice gates to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Someone left a signal flag on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Thaddeus came by asking about the singing at the docks. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. A dispute over the comet flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 249, autumn of year 35

Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on. Greta was hired to carry a tin whistle from the Archivist's cell to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Rumours about the old tunnels reached the Archivist's cell. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. The weather turned. Greta moved the pair of spectacles indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about whether the bridge will hold. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 34 of everything, except the ledger, which is always short.

Entry 250, summer of year 35

Greta won 2 ink-weights on a bet about the new curfew and spent all of it on supper. Rumours about the harvest count reached the cataloguers' gallery. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. The weather turned. Greta moved the cracked compass indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about whether the bridge will hold. Greta found a ledger half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 251, spring of year 35

At the Archivist's cell, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone. Greta repaired the signal flag at the Archivist's cell for Ingrid, who paid in 79 ink-weights and a long story about the singing at the docks. Greta closed early, walked to the Reading Well, and watched the lights come on. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Magnus came by asking about the comet. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 252, autumn of year 35

Greta was hired to carry a bundle of letters from the sluice gates to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta found a bolt of linen half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta repaired the clockwork bird at the sluice gates for Benedikt, who paid in 22 ink-weights and a long story about the census. Greta found a wax seal half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 253, winter of year 35

Rumours about the census reached the cataloguers' gallery. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. Greta was hired to carry a signal flag from the cataloguers' gallery to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Someone left a spool of wire on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Phaedra came by asking about the singing at the docks. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 254, autumn of year 35

A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Greta repaired the tin whistle at the cataloguers' gallery for Imogen, who paid in 89 ink-weights and a long story about the right way to mend a net. Greta repaired the oilskin map at the cataloguers' gallery for Quentin, who paid in 28 ink-weights and a long story about whether the bridge will hold. Greta spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 84 of everything, except the ledger, which is always short. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the rumour of a second well for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 255, summer of year 35

The weather turned. Greta moved the bundle of letters indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the rumour of a second well. Greta was hired to carry a copper pipe from the cataloguers' gallery to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded. At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real iron kettle from a fake one by weight alone. Ursula came by asking about the right way to mend a net. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 256, winter of year 35

At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real brass lantern from a fake one by weight alone. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the harvest count for an hour and parted better friends than before. The weather turned. Greta moved the bolt of linen indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the old tunnels.

Entry 257, spring of year 35

Greta was hired to carry a hand bell from the Reading Well to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 50 of everything, except the clockwork bird, which is always short. Nikolai came by asking about who really won the regatta. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 258, autumn of year 35

At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real signal flag from a fake one by weight alone. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. The weather turned. Greta moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the new curfew. A dispute over the singing at the docks flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 259, autumn of year 35

Greta found a hand bell half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Xavier came by asking about the tax on doors. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 260, winter of year 35

Someone left a bundle of letters on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. At the Reading Well, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A dispute over the comet flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Greta found a ledger half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 261, autumn of year 36

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta won 80 ink-weights on a bet about the harvest count and spent all of it on supper. Bram came by asking about the singing at the docks. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 262, summer of year 36

Greta repaired the wax seal at the Reading Well for Phaedra, who paid in 60 ink-weights and a long story about the singing at the docks. Zelda came by asking about who really won the regatta. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta was hired to carry a spool of wire from the Reading Well to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Rumours about the harvest count reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 263, winter of year 36

Greta repaired the coil of rope at the cataloguers' gallery for Hamish, who paid in 31 ink-weights and a long story about the price of lamp oil. Someone left a wax seal on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the cataloguers' gallery. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta found a wax seal half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about whether the bridge will hold for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 264, autumn of year 36

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the quarantine for an hour and parted better friends than before. The weather turned. Greta moved the sack of salt indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net.

Entry 265, autumn of year 37

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about who really won the regatta for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about who really won the regatta. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. The weather turned. Greta moved the signal flag indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta.

Entry 266, summer of year 37

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Greta was hired to carry a oilskin map from the cataloguers' gallery to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 267, winter of year 37

Gideon came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Liora came by asking about the comet. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 43 of everything, except the sack of salt, which is always short.

Entry 268, winter of year 37

At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real wax seal from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about the tax on doors reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Rumours about who really won the regatta reached the Stacks of Ash.

Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 269, spring of year 38

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta repaired the bolt of linen at the Archivist's cell for Kestrel, who paid in 47 ink-weights and a long story about the harvest count. Greta was hired to carry a coil of rope from the Archivist's cell to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta repaired the bolt of linen at the Archivist's cell for Zora, who paid in 88 ink-weights and a long story about the quarantine.

Entry 270, spring of year 38

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about who really won the regatta for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 56 of everything, except the coil of rope, which is always short. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the singing at the docks. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Someone left a glass float on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 271, spring of year 38

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tax on doors for an hour and parted better friends than before. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta was hired to carry a grain scale from the Reading Well to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Rumours about whether the bridge will hold reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 272, winter of year 38

A dispute over the singing at the docks flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Rumours about the new curfew reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta won 76 ink-weights on a bet about whether the bridge will hold and spent all of it on supper. Tiberius came by asking about the census. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 273, summer of year 38

Someone left a clockwork bird on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. At the Reading Well, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real iron kettle from a fake one by weight alone. Someone left a clockwork bird on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 274, spring of year 38

Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 69 of everything, except the pair of spectacles, which is always short. Greta found a bundle of letters half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Valentin came by asking about the tax on doors. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 275, winter of year 38

Greta found a signal flag half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Liora came by asking about the singing at the docks. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Lysander came by asking about the quarantine. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 276, spring of year 38

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta was hired to carry a cracked compass from the Stacks of Ash to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 277, autumn of year 39

Emeric came by asking about the tax on doors. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta found a ledger half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the missing shipment for an hour and parted better friends than before. Someone left a sextant on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 278, autumn of year 39

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the old tunnels. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta found a bundle of letters half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 279, autumn of year 39

Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 89 of everything, except the tin whistle, which is always short. Greta won 19 ink-weights on a bet about the rumour of a second well and spent all of it on supper. Someone left a hand bell on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 280, autumn of year 39

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the quarantine. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Someone left a sextant on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Nadira came by asking about who really won the regatta. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Greta won 30 ink-weights on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 281, spring of year 40

Greta closed early, walked to the Reading Well, and watched the lights come on. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Sunniva came by asking about the singing at the docks. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 5 of everything, except the sack of salt, which is always short.

Entry 282, spring of year 40

At the Archivist's cell, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real pair of spectacles from a fake one by weight alone. Quentin came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 283, spring of year 40

Someone left a coil of rope on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta found a spool of wire half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta won 32 ink-weights on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 284, autumn of year 40

Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 23 of everything, except the ledger, which is always short. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 37 of everything, except the wax seal, which is always short. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta repaired the grain scale at the sluice gates for Wilhelmina, who paid in 54 ink-weights and a long story about the quarantine. Greta was hired to carry a ledger from the sluice gates to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 285, winter of year 40

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta won 74 ink-weights on a bet about whether the bridge will hold and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Greta moved the bundle of letters indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tariff on salt. Greta won 4 ink-weights on a bet about the harvest count and spent all of it on supper. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about whether the bridge will hold. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 286, winter of year 40

At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real bundle of letters from a fake one by weight alone. Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. A dispute over the quarantine flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 287, autumn of year 40

Rumours about who really won the regatta reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Torvald came by asking about the new curfew. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Rumours about the tax on doors reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Rumours about whether the bridge will hold reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A dispute over the rumour of a second well flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 288, summer of year 40

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the census for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 84 of everything, except the glass float, which is always short. Someone left a wax seal on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 289, summer of year 40

Greta spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 37 of everything, except the grain scale, which is always short. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the new curfew. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 290, winter of year 40

At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real brass lantern from a fake one by weight alone. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the quarantine. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real sack of salt from a fake one by weight alone. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 29 of everything, except the coil of rope, which is always short. Greta was hired to carry a coil of rope from the sluice gates to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 291, spring of year 40

Nadira came by asking about the harvest count. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the singing at the docks. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta repaired the brass lantern at the Reading Well for Hamish, who paid in 27 ink-weights and a long story about the census.

Entry 292, summer of year 40

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Soren came by asking about the comet. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 293, winter of year 40

Delphine came by asking about the new curfew. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. A dispute over the quarantine flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Greta repaired the coil of rope at the cataloguers' gallery for Fenwick, who paid in 60 ink-weights and a long story about the census. Greta found a copper pipe half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real bolt of linen from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 294, winter of year 40

Greta repaired the brass lantern at the Archivist's cell for Phaedra, who paid in 71 ink-weights and a long story about the quarantine. At the Archivist's cell, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real bolt of linen from a fake one by weight alone. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 295, winter of year 40

Anouk came by asking about the old tunnels. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta was hired to carry a cracked compass from the Archivist's cell to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 71 of everything, except the hand bell, which is always short. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 296, summer of year 40

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta found a copper pipe half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta found a bundle of letters half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 297, winter of year 41

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Rumours about the price of lamp oil reached the sluice gates. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 298, summer of year 41

Greta was hired to carry a bundle of letters from the Reading Well to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Someone left a brass lantern on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta found a bolt of linen half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta was hired to carry a wax seal from the Reading Well to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Someone left a sextant on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 299, spring of year 41

Greta was hired to carry a signal flag from the sluice gates to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Ignatius came by asking about who really won the regatta. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 80 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short. Someone left a brass lantern on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 300, spring of year 41

At the Archivist's cell, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real iron kettle from a fake one by weight alone. At the Archivist's cell, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real wax seal from a fake one by weight alone. Corvina came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 301, summer of year 41

The weather turned. Greta moved the wax seal indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the missing shipment. A dispute over the tariff on salt flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 76 of everything, except the copper pipe, which is always short. Rumours about the rumour of a second well reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 10 of everything, except the oilskin map, which is always short.

Entry 302, winter of year 41

Greta found a spool of wire half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the harvest count. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tax on doors. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. A dispute over the harvest count flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 303, spring of year 41

Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a spool of wire on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. The weather turned. Greta moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the new curfew. Greta found a copper pipe half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 304, spring of year 41

The weather turned. Greta moved the clockwork bird indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the rumour of a second well. At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real cracked compass from a fake one by weight alone. At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real grain scale from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 305, spring of year 42

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the Archivist's cell. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta was hired to carry a cracked compass from the Archivist's cell to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta found a ledger half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. The weather turned. Greta moved the spool of wire indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine.

Entry 306, autumn of year 42

Greta was hired to carry a iron kettle from the Reading Well to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Ignatius came by asking about the singing at the docks. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about who really won the regatta. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 307, summer of year 42

At the Archivist's cell, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real cracked compass from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about whether the bridge will hold reached the Archivist's cell. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta won 26 ink-weights on a bet about the price of lamp oil and spent all of it on supper. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 308, summer of year 42

Someone left a cracked compass on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Someone left a signal flag on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta was hired to carry a tin whistle from the Stacks of Ash to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 309, spring of year 42

Greta repaired the glass float at the Reading Well for Marisol, who paid in 2 ink-weights and a long story about the price of lamp oil. Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Greta repaired the bolt of linen at the Reading Well for Brigid, who paid in 18 ink-weights and a long story about the comet. Greta was hired to carry a copper pipe from the Reading Well to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 310, spring of year 42

Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 45 of everything, except the glass float, which is always short. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the missing shipment for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta won 26 ink-weights on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. Greta found a sextant half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 311, spring of year 42

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 312, autumn of year 42

Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a pair of spectacles on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 313, summer of year 43

Greta repaired the grain scale at the Stacks of Ash for Orsolya, who paid in 29 ink-weights and a long story about the rumour of a second well. Greta repaired the wax seal at the Stacks of Ash for Umberto, who paid in 7 ink-weights and a long story about whether the bridge will hold. Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on. Greta repaired the hand bell at the Stacks of Ash for Astrid, who paid in 34 ink-weights and a long story about the price of lamp oil.

Entry 314, summer of year 43

A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Greta repaired the brass lantern at the cataloguers' gallery for Kenji, who paid in 40 ink-weights and a long story about the new curfew. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 315, autumn of year 43

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta found a hand bell half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Greta won 39 ink-weights on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. Nkechi came by asking about the harvest count. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. At the sluice gates, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real copper pipe from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 316, spring of year 43

At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real tin whistle from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about who really won the regatta reached the cataloguers' gallery. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A dispute over the harvest count flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 317, spring of year 43

Quillon came by asking about the tax on doors. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. At the Reading Well, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real glass float from a fake one by weight alone. Greta was hired to carry a clockwork bird from the Reading Well to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Rumours about who really won the regatta reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 318, summer of year 43

Greta repaired the spool of wire at the Reading Well for Calloway, who paid in 34 ink-weights and a long story about the comet. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Ursula came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 319, winter of year 43

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 68 of everything, except the glass float, which is always short.

Entry 320, autumn of year 43

Greta found a sack of salt half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Someone left a grain scale on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta found a signal flag half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Ysolde came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 321, autumn of year 43

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Rumours about whether the bridge will hold reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 322, summer of year 43

Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 3 of everything, except the sextant, which is always short. The weather turned. Greta moved the ledger indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet. Greta was hired to carry a tin whistle from the Archivist's cell to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 323, autumn of year 43

Greta repaired the oilskin map at the Stacks of Ash for Osric, who paid in 18 ink-weights and a long story about whether the bridge will hold. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta was hired to carry a bundle of letters from the Stacks of Ash to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 58 of everything, except the glass float, which is always short.

Entry 324, spring of year 43

Greta won 44 ink-weights on a bet about the right way to mend a net and spent all of it on supper. A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta found a coil of rope half-buried near the sluice gates and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Fitzgerald came by asking about the harvest count. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 325, spring of year 43

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tax on doors for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 41 of everything, except the iron kettle, which is always short. Greta closed early, walked to the cataloguers' gallery, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 326, summer of year 43

At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real signal flag from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Someone left a tin whistle on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 327, winter of year 43

Rumours about the price of lamp oil reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 38 of everything, except the pair of spectacles, which is always short. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before. Greta closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. Greta was hired to carry a copper pipe from the Reading Well to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 328, spring of year 43

A dispute over whether the bridge will hold flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Greta spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 24 of everything, except the clockwork bird, which is always short. A dispute over the rumour of a second well flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the sluice gates; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 329, spring of year 44

Greta repaired the ledger at the Reading Well for Jorah, who paid in 50 ink-weights and a long story about the singing at the docks. Greta won 4 ink-weights on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper. Greta won 74 ink-weights on a bet about whether the bridge will hold and spent all of it on supper. Nikolai came by asking about the comet. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 330, winter of year 44

Greta was hired to carry a tin whistle from the Reading Well to the Stacks of Ash without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Greta closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. Rumours about whether the bridge will hold reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Rumours about the old tunnels reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta found a copper pipe half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 331, spring of year 44

Someone left a signal flag on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 3 of everything, except the glass float, which is always short. Greta was hired to carry a brass lantern from the Archivist's cell to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Someone left a coil of rope on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. A dispute over the tariff on salt flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 332, winter of year 44

Greta repaired the oilskin map at the Reading Well for Imogen, who paid in 60 ink-weights and a long story about who really won the regatta. Someone left a brass lantern on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 333, summer of year 45

Valentin came by asking about the singing at the docks. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta won 29 ink-weights on a bet about the harvest count and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Greta moved the ledger indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count. Someone left a grain scale on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta won 53 ink-weights on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 334, summer of year 45

At the Stacks of Ash, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real sextant from a fake one by weight alone. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 29 of everything, except the brass lantern, which is always short. Greta found a hand bell half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 335, summer of year 45

Greta won 5 ink-weights on a bet about the old tunnels and spent all of it on supper. Someone left a bundle of letters on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta won 63 ink-weights on a bet about the harvest count and spent all of it on supper. Someone left a grain scale on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 336, summer of year 45

At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real sack of salt from a fake one by weight alone. At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real copper pipe from a fake one by weight alone. At the cataloguers' gallery, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real copper pipe from a fake one by weight alone. Someone left a bundle of letters on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 337, summer of year 46

A dispute over the tax on doors flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Halcyon came by asking about who really won the regatta. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta was hired to carry a signal flag from the Stacks of Ash to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 338, summer of year 46

Greta repaired the copper pipe at the Stacks of Ash for Astrid, who paid in 84 ink-weights and a long story about the quarantine. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the rumour of a second well for an hour and parted better friends than before. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. A dispute over the tax on doors flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 339, winter of year 46

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the new curfew for an hour and parted better friends than before. Sixten came by asking about the tax on doors. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead. Greta was hired to carry a cracked compass from the sluice gates to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 340, spring of year 46

Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 60 of everything, except the sack of salt, which is always short. Greta closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 341, summer of year 46

Greta spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 37 of everything, except the bundle of letters, which is always short. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Someone left a cracked compass on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the new curfew. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. The weather turned. Greta moved the ledger indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta.

Entry 342, summer of year 46

Greta spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 80 of everything, except the tin whistle, which is always short. Rumours about the old tunnels reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta was hired to carry a sextant from the Reading Well to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 343, spring of year 46

Rumours about who really won the regatta reached the Archivist's cell. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Greta won 78 ink-weights on a bet about the rumour of a second well and spent all of it on supper. A dispute over the quarantine flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 344, winter of year 46

the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about whether the bridge will hold. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Rumours about the harvest count reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Rumours about who really won the regatta reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 345, autumn of year 46

Rumours about the missing shipment reached the Stacks of Ash. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. The weather turned. Greta moved the brass lantern indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the price of lamp oil. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 346, summer of year 46

Greta won 22 ink-weights on a bet about the harvest count and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Greta moved the pair of spectacles indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet. Rumours about the price of lamp oil reached the Reading Well. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 347, autumn of year 46

A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Someone left a signal flag on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta was hired to carry a cracked compass from the Archivist's cell to the sluice gates without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Rumours about the old tunnels reached the Archivist's cell. Greta pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about who really won the regatta. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 348, winter of year 46

Greta closed early, walked to the sluice gates, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a clockwork bird on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta repaired the ledger at the Reading Well for Brigid, who paid in 4 ink-weights and a long story about whether the bridge will hold. A dispute over the census flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Delphine came by asking about the right way to mend a net. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 349, spring of year 47

A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. At the Reading Well, Greta taught a newcomer how to tell a real cracked compass from a fake one by weight alone. Greta found a iron kettle half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. A stranger asked Greta for the password to the workshop. Greta laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Xiomara came by asking about the tax on doors. Greta said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 350, spring of year 47

Greta won 39 ink-weights on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Greta read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Greta spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 68 of everything, except the ledger, which is always short. A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Greta and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 351, winter of year 47

Someone left a iron kettle on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Someone left a grain scale on the doorstep with no note. Greta has a suspect and is probably right. Greta closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. Greta repaired the hand bell at the Archivist's cell for Vesna, who paid in 15 ink-weights and a long story about the harvest count.